Regal raise arouses right royal rage

LONDON (AP) — The Royal Family, under increasing public scrutiny by inflation-plagued citizens, was under fire again today after the Conservative government gave it a £538,000 ($1.4-million) pay rise and stung just about everyone else with an austerity budget.

"Good day for the royals," said the mass-circulation Daily Mirror in a front-page story. "Mean day for the rest."

Angry labor MPs, including royalty-basher Willie Hamilton from Scotland, planned to raise a storm in the House of Commons over what Labor MP Bob Cryer from working-class Yorkshire emotionally branded "a kick in the teeth for the ill and the unemployed."

Cryer was the most bitter about a 30-per-cent pay increase for Princess Anne, who got £85,000 ($221,000) of the taxpayers' money in the Civil List, the annual state allowance for British royals to maintain their palaces and perform public duties.

A Buckingham Palace spokesman said 29-year-old Anne got the 30-per-cent rise because she overspent her allowance last year by "several thousand pounds" and has had to borrow from a bank to pay her debts.

She ran into the red maintaining the £500,000 ($1.3-million) Gloucestershire estate, Gatcombe Park, her mother bought for her as a wedding present when she married cavalry Capt. Mark Phillips four years ago.

But, the royal spokesman noted, she'll have to work for her money by performing more official duties.

Altogether, the Royal Family will get £3.317 million ($8.62 million) this year, a 19-per-cent increase over last year and in line with Britain's current rate of inflation.

The Queen herself gets a raise of £538,000 ($1.39 million) to take her allowance to £2.72 million ($7.07 million).

Most of this goes on running Buckingham Palace, her castles and travelling with the royal retinue of officials and aides.

However, palace press secretary Michael Shea stressed that the Queen will fork out more of her own personal fortune this year to help out — £248,000 ($644,000), £36,000 ($93,600) more than last year.

Shea said the monarch isn't hiring palace staff these days to save money and "in the coming year we shall be making more economies."

That isn't likely to mean much to hard-up Britons, suffering from a chronic economic malaise and tough budget efforts to cure it.

The chancellor of the exchequer, Sir Geoffrey Howe, tightened the belt a little more Wednesday with "inescapable" tough policies, slashing state spending and raising taxes on drinks, cigarettes and gasoline in another bid to brake Britain's decline.

Labor leaders slammed the budget, furious with increases in charges for the state-run National Health Service, cuts in social security and taxing sickness benefits.

Labor Leader James Callaghan branded it "the most socially divisive budget since 1931."

Len Murray, general secretary of the Trades Union Congress, said it will plunge this country "back into the '30s with a vengeance."

New nurse strike looms

A tentative contract agreement has been reached for registered nurses at 113 general hospitals in B.C. but trouble is brewing for 2,700 other nurses.

Announcement of the tentative pact came Wednesday from the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. and Health Labor Relations Association.

Voting on the agreement will take place over the next five weeks.

The contract calls for a 44-per-cent increase in nurses' salaries over 27 months and a five-per-cent increase in benefits.

The nurses would get a lump sum payment of $600, plus five wage increases over the term of the contract.

It increases the rate of a first-year nurse to $1,900 a month from $1,305. Top-level supervisory pay increases to $2,745 a month from $1,924.

The five increases are: $145 a month from Jan. 1, 12 per cent on May 1, $76 a month on Jan. 1, 1981, eight per cent Aug. 1, 1981, and 3.49 per cent Jan. 1, 1982.

But the same day RNABC was announcing this agreement, it served seven-day strike notice for 2,700 community and psychiatric nurses.

Victoria-area health units are not affected by this dispute.

The nurses' contract expired Dec. 31, 1979, and the major issue is wages.

The government's bargaining agency, the Government Employee Relations Bureau, has proposed a three-year-agreement with an eight-per-cent increase each year.

The nurses want a 27-month contract with a compounded salary increase of 39 per cent.

Mediator Clarke Gilmour was involved in the dispute and has been asked to withdraw by RNABC.

No strike action is possible until he reports to the labor minister and the minister informs both parties of this action.

The nurses voted Dec. 18 by a 91-per-cent margin to go on strike to back up their demands.

The Labor Code states that a strike vote is only operative for 90 days and that time limit expired.

However, both parties involved in the dispute agreed to an extension of the deadline.

RNABC was given a 98-per-cent strike mandate by the 12,500 RNs who now have a tentative agreement.

St. Helens cleared to pop her peak

SPIRIT LAKE, Wash. (UPI) — More earthquakes shook dormant volcano Mount St. Helens today as the last few residents who live on the slopes of the Southwest Washington mountain evacuated their homes.

Scientists have warned that Mount St. Helens, which last erupted in 1857, may be building toward another eruption that could come within a few days.

The last of approximately 60 year-round residents of the Spirit Lake area on the volcano's north side moved out after being warned of the danger.

Gifford-Pinchot National Forest officials in Vancouver, Wash., said Forest Service personnel working in the Mount St. Helens area were removed during the night, but returned to work during the daytime hours.

On Wednesday sheriff's deputies blocked off the only major highway to the snow-covered, 9,677-foot mountain 100 miles south of Seattle.

All private aircraft were banned from flying over the 9,766-foot peak because federal officials said the airspace was becoming congested with sightseers.

"That thing erupts every 60 to 100 years consistently," said Dr. Leonard Palmer, geology professor at Portland State University. "We haven't had an eruption for more than 100 years.

"You'd have to have your head in the sand to not be worried."

A rapid-fire series of earthquakes began last Thursday and reached a one-a-minute peak Tuesday night before diminishing to about one per hour Wednesday.

Scientists believe the biggest threat from an eruption at Mount St. Helens would not be from lava, but from mudflows roaring down the mountain into three hydroelectric reservoirs on the Lewis River just south of the peak.

That could cause massive flooding in the entire river valley and possibly swell the Columbia River, threatening the city of Portland about 50 miles away.

The few witnesses to the mountain's 1857 eruption said great clouds of volcanic material were spewed into the sky. Ash a half-inch deep fell at The Dalles, Ore., 65 miles away.

Zero growth, higher prices grim forecast

OTTAWA (CP) — The economy is not expected to grow at all this year, the Conference Board in Canada said Wednesday in its latest and most pessimistic outlook for 1980.

The board, an Ottawa-based business research group, had earlier forecast growth of 0.7 per cent, but because of worsening world economic conditions it now expects zero growth.

Furthermore, the board said, "this year of no growth will be accompanied by continuing high rates of inflation."

It estimates consumer prices will rise by 9.7 per cent compared with inflation of 9.1 per cent last year.

Unemployment is also expected to worsen to 7.8 per cent from 7.5 per cent, the board said in its quarterly forecast.

Despite a slowdown in export sales, the current account deficit is expected to rise only slightly to $5.3 billion because imports are expected to slow as well. The current account is a measure of Canada's trade in goods, services and travel with other countries.

The board estimates the federal deficit will rise to $12.4 billion this year, slightly higher than in 1979, because continued inflation and slow growth will result in federal revenue rising less quickly than expenditures.

The board's forecast assumes no change in government policy, thus sidestepping the effects of anticipated higher oil prices and a federal budget. As a result, the board warns its inflation forecast may be too low.

Consumer spending, after adjusting for inflation, is expected to grow by 1.7 per cent in 1980, reflecting the erosion of real purchasing power because of price increases.

Housing starts of only 163,000 units — the lowest since 1968 — have been estimated as demand will be weak in light of high interest rates and consumers having less money available for major spending activities.

Business investment — the main source of economic strength in 1979 — will still be the most positive element for the economy.

The board warns that Canadian interest rates will continue to parallel those in the U.S. because of the continued high current account deficit and government concern about a decline in the value of the dollar.

But interest rates could peak during the summer and then decline by the end of 1980 with short-term rates — of up to one year — likely to fall more quickly than long-term rates.

Bank rate 15.49%

Times News Services

The Bank of Canada lending rate rose by 0.70 per cent to a record 15.49 per cent today as the Toronto and New York stock markets plunged.

Hard on the heels of the central bank rate hike, the Royal Bank of Canada and the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce raised their prime lending rates Thursday to a record 16.5 per cent from 15.75 per cent, effective today, and other major Canadian chartered banks were expected to follow suit.

Toronto stock market trading was at near-record lows towards the close with no advances among the most-active exchange listings. Among industrials, Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas declined 11⅜ to $98, Falconbridge Nickel A 1 to $88, Gulf Canada 11 to 119, Bow Valley Industries 7 to $34 and Dome Pete 6 to $56.

In New York, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which closed Wednesday at its lowest level in almost two years, lost another 7.34 to 754.78 by noon EST.

The Bank of Canada, raising the rate at which it lends money to the nation's financial institutions for a third consecutive week, was continuing its new policy of letting its lending rates float 0.25 per cent above the average yield of 91-day treasury bills.

Visit the stars

Sally Field is rated as the hot favorite to win the Oscar for best actress on April 14.

Her performance as Norma Rae, a young woman who gets involved in the tension-filled union struggles of a southern plant, has been widely hailed.

New York movie writers called it the best performance of the year.

But predicting Academy Award winners can be a difficult chore.

For example, last year Jill Clayburgh was regarded by the same New York writers as a shoo-in for the best actress award but Academy voters in Los Angeles surprised them by picking Jane Fonda.

Fonda and Clayburgh are back again this year, along with Marsha Mason and Bette Midler.

The Victoria Times and VI*90 are sponsoring a Visit the Stars contest, giving readers a chance to win a trip for two to Hollywood if they can correctly predict the Academy Awards for best actress, best actor and best movie.

The official entry form, along with the full list of rules, is in an advertisement on page 37 today.

'I pray he doesn't harm someone'

By MIKE HUGHES

The mother of a 15-year-old boy whose sentence at a B.C. juvenile detention centre ends Friday fears for her son's future.

"I'll give him a week and he'll be right back in," she said in an interview today.

"I just hope and pray he doesn't harm someone before he's back."

Her son has a drug problem and was sentenced to the centre for being involved in a purse snatching.

He's spent time in receiving homes, remand homes and other facilities and critics of the system say his case is typical of the way juveniles are shuffled about.

They spend so much time in detention centres that they begin to look on them as home.

The 15-year-old is being tested now for possible brain damage from LSD use and the dilemma facing the court Friday is simple: Where does he go from here?

There are no mental health resources for youngsters and if he stays in the community the problem is how to keep him off drugs?

His case came up Wednesday in Victoria's family court along with two others and Judge Lawrence Brahan gave the boy's probation officer until Friday to come up with alternatives.

If none is available, he will be released and become a ward of the superintendent of child welfare.

That probably means a foster home and his mother fears he won't last long there.

"He needs help. He needs some one-on-one therapy and he's not getting it," she said.

"If they put him in a foster home, he's going to blow it."

She says her son is typical of problem kids who are pushed from one person to another.

Professional people try to help but they don't seem to have any answers either, she said.

"I don't see the solution. If it is brought to the public's attention, they will just say they are a bunch of bad kids — the public really doesn't care."

Victoria Ald. Gretchen Brewin who was in family court when the boy appeared, said it's time the community became more

Victoria's 'jetfoil age' will dawn on May 15

Victoria will enter the jetfoil age on May 15 when the Flying Princess starts making two trips daily between the city and Seattle.

Operation Jetfoil chairman Cedric Steele said Wednesday the B.C. Development Corporation has forwarded a deposit of $50,000 in U.S. funds to Boeing of Seattle to seal a six-month lease for the vessel.

Total cost of the lease is $3.62 million U.S., including salaries for the crew, $1 million for fuel, and charges for parts and servicing.

If there is a deficit at the end of six months, it will be paid by BCDC.

If there is a surplus, about 15 per cent of it would go to BCDC while the remainder would go to the Flying Princess Transportation Corporation, a non-profit society to be formed by Operation Jetfoil.

Proposals are being considered for the first voyage of the Flying Princess early in the morning of May 15.

An application will be made for a bar licence for the vessel.

The jetfoil will dock in Seattle overnight for servicing. It will make its first trip to Victoria in the morning.

It travels at 80 km/h and arrives in Victoria in less than two hours, compared with more than four hours for the Queen of Prince Rupert.

The jetfoil carries 250 passengers on a reservation basis while the Rupert carries 800.

Between mid-May and July 1, with the jetfoil making two trips and the Rupert one, the total passenger capacity out of Seattle will be 1,300, or 500 less than the Princess Marguerite which carried 1,800.

However, in the peak summer months there will be two trips by the Rupert and three by the jetfoil, for a total passenger capacity of 2,350.

Steele said he will approach eight people this week to see if they are interested in joining the board of the Flying Princess Transportation Corporation.

"I would like to step out of this myself, if possible, because I have several other projects I would like to pursue."

Steele, who is president of the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce, said the jetfoil service was launched as a community venture, with the chamber acting only as catalyst to get negotiations started.

The fare on the Flying Princess will be $20 or $25 in U.S. funds for a one-way ticket. A special reduced rate may be available for the round trip.

Reduced rates may also be considered for children and for people travelling in groups.

By comparison the rate on the Marguerite was $13 one way, $21 return, in U.S. funds, but a small increase is in the works.

The FPT Corporation will try to hire an expert group to operate the jetfoil service on its behalf.

Steele said the logical choice is the B.C. Steamship Co., the government agency running the Rupert. Talks are already under way.

"We hope to merge the schedule of the jetfoil and the Queen of Prince Rupert," Steele said. "It makes sense for the B.C. Steamship Co. to be handling both vessels. We might be able to sell a package with a ride on the jetfoil one way and on the Rupert coming back."

At the end of six months, the FPTC will have the option to purchase the Flying Princess for $8.5 million U.S. or about $10 million in current Canadian dollars.

The Flying Princess is a two-year-old demonstrator model. New jetfoils cost more than $11 million in U.S. funds.

Steele said he hoped the FPTC will decide to buy the jetfoil and order two or three more.

"I view this as just the beginning of a new transportation system for Vancouver Island."

He said a Victoria-based company could operate jetfoils linking Seattle, Victoria, Vancouver and Nanaimo.

"We are moving into a new age in transportation and jetfoils could be the answer."

The jetfoil operates like a giant water ski, skimming along on top of the water. It has water jet propulsion and is stabilized by a submerged foil.

It can operate in waves up to three metres high.

Freight pressure minimal on ferries despite fears

Despite near-panic reactions to news of the strike-bound CP marine freight service to Vancouver, a B.C. Ferries spokesman said today pressure on the system has so far been only minimal.

The spokesman said today although a half-dozen semi-trailer rigs and two other commercial trucks left behind at Horseshoe Bay on the first sailing this morning, there have been no problems elsewhere.

First sailing loads on the Horseshoe Bay-Departure Bay and Tsawwassen-Swartz Bay routes were heavier than usual but by mid-morning the crunch was over.

Despite the lack of overloads, the B.C. Ferry Corp. decided Wednesday night to add one extra sailing of the truck ferry Queen of Alberni each day to provide additional capacity for truck drivers who ususally use the strike-bound CP service.

The agreement was reached at a meeting between Transport Minister Alex Fraser and ferry corporation directors.

The B.C. Motor Transport Association, which met with Fraser on Tuesday to discuss the problem, had called for continuous overnight sailings of the ferry.

The one extra sailing between Tsawwassen and Swartz Bay will be on a drop-trailer rather than truck-and-trailer basis to accomodate more loads.

The ferry will be able to carry 54 trailers on the sailing.

"It will be the companies' responsibility to handle all the loading and unloading," Fraser said.

He said there won't be any space problem at the Tsawwassen terminal and hopefully there will not be any problem at Swartz Bay.

The minister also said the corporation will call on additional ships if required.

The ferry corporation normally handles about 50 per cent of the truck trailers moving between the mainland and Vancouver Island and the extra sailing on the Queen of Alberni will take up about 15 to 20 per cent of the slack caused by the CP strike, he said.

"We're not trying to strive to pick up everything CP was hauling. We're always going to be behind — that's for sure."

Commodities going to Vancouver Island include food, general merchandise, coal, sulphur, liquefied propane gas, machinery and paper products.

The extra load on B.C. Ferries followed the strike Monday of 60 members of the Seafarers International Union, who want wage parity with workers in the West Coast tugboat industry.

The CP workers want a $1.08-an-hour wage increase on a base rate of $8.49 an hour while CP has offered a 74-cents-an-hour increase.

Labor Minister Jack Heinrich had asked the federal government to appoint a conciliator to resolve the dispute.

However, a spokesman for federal Labor Minister Gerald Regan said the appointment could not be made at the request of a third party but must come from one of the parties involved in the dispute.

Bank rate bumped to 15.49

Two weeks ago — when it was pegged — the Bank of Canada's lending rate stood at 14 per cent.

In New York, silver plummeted to $10 an ounce — then improved to $12 — in trading on rumors that billionaire Hunt Brothers of Dallas threatened to liquidate their huge silver holdings if they could not raise a loan with major foreign banks.

Nelson Bunker Hunt and W. Herbert Hunt, who reportedly hold the largest hoard of silver in the nation, have seen their holdings drop in value from $50 an ounce to just over $15 at the close in New York Wednesday.

Bunker Hunt stunned the market Wednesday when he announced in Paris he had formed an investment company with wealthy Arab interests to market silver-backed interest-bearing certificates.

As both gold and silver prices slumped, the U.S. dollar hit a four-year high against the Italian lira and a 10-month peak against the West German mark on world financial markets today.

The two-year low on the New York stock market in light trading Wednesday was believed caused by the prospect of even-higher U.S. interest rates and government-fuelled inflation fears.

The Federal Reserve Board, in settling accounts with member banks, let short-term rates soar to 22 per cent.

Bullion prices fell sharply this morning and were still well below Wednesday's levels even after a slight recovery later in the day.

By mid-afternoon gold was selling in London and Zurich for $490.50 an ounce, down from $505.50 and $504.50 respectively late Wednesday.

Silver, which fell to $13.75 an ounce early in the day, traded in London at $16, down $1.50 from Wednesday.

"It's all part of the big clearout, with holders tired of holding on to metal and waiting for the big rise, especially in view of the heavy cost due to high interest rates," said one London dealer.

Meanwhile, the U.S. dollar continued to benefit from investment-attracting American interest rates.

In New York, the Canadian dollar was up 1/5 at $0.8420 at 3:30 p.m. EST.

The Dow Jones industrial average finished Wednesday with a loss of 5.71 points to 762.12, the lowest level since it finished at 755.37 on April 4, 1978.

The closely watched barometer has fallen 141.72 points since hitting a 1980 high of 903 on Feb. 13.

Food airlifted

NORTH SYDNEY, N.S. (UPC) — CN Marine ordered an emergency airlift of food today, conceding that with no relief from the wind it will take "a little while yet" to free two ferries trapped for four days in 17-foot thick ice.

The Marine Atlantica with 142 passengers and 69 crewmen aboard, the car ferry Frederick Carter with about 50 crewmen and the freighter Jopa-f have been held since Sunday in a huge ice field less than 10 miles from Sydney harbor.

Two Coast Guard icebreakers, the huge Louis St. Laurent and the smaller Labrador, also remained helplessly trapped.

The Labrador, however, managed to pump 50 to 75 tons of fresh water aboard the Marine Athaltnica today and Coast Guard and Armed Forces helicopters were called in to airlift food and other provisions to the passenger ferry.

The 142 passengers accepted the latest setback in good humor.

Problem kids shuffled off

aware of what is going on.

"We do things to kids which we would never do to adults," Brewin said.

She said the various government ministries involved also have to show more concern and spend more money on solutions to the problems.

Brewin, Victoria council's representative on the Family Court Committee, said her day in court has left her upset about the way the juveniles are shuffled about within the justice system.

There appears to be a lack of facilities to deal with the juveniles, she said, as well, at times, a lack of concern by those responsible for them.

Brewin said another boy whose case came up Wednesday has been "all over the map," spending nine months in one facility or another.

He was seven months in the Willingdon juvenile detention centre in Burnaby and about two weeks ago, was sent over to the Juvenile Detention Centre at 1125 Pembroke.

But there was no information sent with the boy and no assistance given on what should be done with him.

"The idea is not to blame anyone in particular for the current situation but for people to start getting their heads together and doing something about why these kids are being shuffled around."

Right now, she said the system is not responding properly to the problems involved in dealing with juvenile offenders and doesn't seem to know how to respond.

There are some facilities available but in some cases they are overcrowded or inadequate for dealing with certain youngsters.

The juvenile centre here is an example, Brewin said.

There are now 19 juveniles being held there and the maximum is said to be 20 although last Christmas there were as many as 30 youngsters crammed in.

Near-repeat of ship tragedy

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Japanese ore carrier, damaged at sea in a manner reminiscent of the Lee Wang Zin tragedy, was heading for Vancouver after being ordered back to port by the Canadian Coast Guard.

The 32,163-gross-ton Yasukawa Maru was boarded from a helicopter Friday night by Fred Bullen, coast guard marine surveyor, after it was learned the vessel had anchored in Hecate Strait which separates the Queen Charlotte Islands from the northern B.C. coast.

The ship's master had not radioed for assistance, but the decision to board was made after unsuccessful attempts to contact the freighter via VHF radio and Morse code.

Bullen said the freighter was taking on water through No. 4 ballast tank which was badly corroded, and there were five small fractures, 25 to 30 centimetres long, to shell plates below the waterline.

He said the ship's pumps were coping, but seas were building to four metres and winds from the southeast were blowing 20 to 30 knots.

Bullen said he told the ship's master to return to Prince Rupert for a full damage survey.

"If that tank had opened up suddenly in heavy weather while she was under way, they would not have been prepared for it and there could have been another Lee Wang Zin tragedy," he said. "She would have listed 15 degrees or more and could have rolled over."

The Taiwanese ore carrier Lee Wang Zin capsized suddenly on Christmas Day off the north tip of the Queen Charlotte Islands, drowning all 30 crew members.

At the inquest into the deaths of the only two bodies recovered, there was speculation heavy pounding by seas caused the ballast tanks to rupture and take on water.

Bullen said the damage aboard the Yasuka Maru — which is 16 years old, the same age as the Lee Wang Zin — was discovered when the ballast tank was sounded while the freighter was en route from Tasu in the Queen Charlotte Islands to drop off its pilot at the pilot station near Prince Rupert.

Like the Lee Wang Zin, also a specially-designed ore carrier, she was fully loaded with 48,000 tons of iron ore concentrate, which had been taken on at Tasu.

"We didn't know why she was at anchor, but we were afraid that the engine was down and she was attempting repairs which would not have been appropriate," Bullen said.

"She is the same size, age and general condition as the Lee Wang Zin. The last thing we wanted was a similar tragedy."

Don Rogers of Kerr Steamships, the vessel's Vancouver agent, said the captain had cabled the vessel's owners in Japan and had anchored to survey the damage before making a decision whether to proceed or return to B.C. for repairs.

Appeal court can't change damages

VANCOUVER (CP) — An appeal court cannot change an award for damages unless it is completely out of line or there was an error in law, the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled.

The court made the ruling in Ottawa last week in restoring a $25,000 award to a Vancouver woman whose teenage daughter was killed in a traffic accident.

The award had been cut to $12,500 by the B.C. Court of Appeal but the higher court said an appeal court cannot substitute its own judgment for that of the trial judge unless the judge had erred on a point of law or the award was based on a "wholly erroneous estimate."

The family's lawyer, John Parker of Vancouver, said Wednesday that the case went to court after Linda Lai, 14, was fatally injured May 13, 1977.

She and another teenage girl, who was injured in the accident, were crossing an intersection when a car and van collided. The van landed on top of the girls.

Justice Thomas Berger of the B.C. Supreme Court gave the award, more than twice the amount of any similar award at the time. Evidence showed the girl, if she had lived, likely would have contributed to her mother's needs.

The year before, she made more than $1,000 babysitting and based on the first months, would have made $2,000 in the year she was killed.

Tories not around enough to acquire the hired guns

Allan Fotheringham

OTTAWA — Mike Gillan is a chap who is a connoisseur of Sinatra, plays the trombone, is a superb host and is so calm he wouldn't get excited if his underwear caught on fire.

"The problem," one of the Joe Clark backrom Tories said this week, "is that we just don't have people like that."

The Tory-in-mourning was not talking about Gillan's midnight abilities, but the fact that he epitomizes why the Liberals are the Natural Governing Party and the Conservatives are doomed to another 15 years in the wilderness.

Gillan, it should be explained, is typical of the skilled functionairies who fuel the Liberal monopoly through sickness and health, good and evil, till death do us part.

He learned the Ottawa ropes as a business reporter for the Globe and Mail and eased into the Liberal apparatus as an aide to Finance Minister Edgar Benson a dozen years ago.

He just shifted to another role

He has gone through the permutations and computations of various Liberal shufflings and when the Trudeaucrats were defeated last May merely shifted over to a role putting out the party organ from the national headquarters.

So the Liberals, as they serenely expected, are back in command after a short interruption and have yet another shiny new finance minister, Allan MacEachen. Who surfaces as his calm , experienced executive asistant, wary of all the sandtraps and shoals of the corridors of money? Michael Gillan, of course.

What my Tory friend was trying to say, not in bitterness but merely in resignation, was that one of the chief reasons why his party has such dismal prospects in Ottawa is that it is never in power long enough to collect a coterie of Gillans and friends who have some prospect of becoming professional hired guns.

The press club bar is supported by once semi-distinguished members of the fifth estate who, preferring security, have been swallowed as if by osmosis by the Liberal monopoly and then have piled up enough canasta points to be taken into the womb of the civil service.

The point the Tory chap makes is perfectly legitimate. The odds, under a Parliamentary system run almost perpetually by Liberals, are insanely stacked against the Opposition.

Gillan, for example, is 41. Through his seniority, and through their mastery of the rules, the Liberals can probably get him in the $40,000 range.

Under the rules, ruled by the Liberals, the aide to the Tory finance critic is hard to bump to the $30,000 mark. You get what you pay for.

Tories tried to correct inequities

The Tories, wallowing in opposition and misery for so long, knew well the inequity of the salary limitations and were setting about to correct them once in power.

The Liberals, who were not in opposition long enough to learn the lessons of the minority status, have no impetus for change. The system could have benifited immeasurably — in the long run for both Tories and Liberals — if they had had a chance to experience how badly the opposition is staffed.

They didn't and we're back to The Gang That Couldn't Talk Straight.

This week an experienced Ottawa correspondent phoned a government factotum to check on a minor item. "Oh sure," said the fellow. "As a matter of fact we were about to go public just before the Conservatives fell. I can get you the info."

In a bit, he phoned back after checking with his minister. Sorry, he reported. He couldn't say a thing yet.

They're back. They're back.

False economies

It is discouraging watching the local civic politicians begin their annual hack-and-chop at the 1980 budget.

Politicians, it seems, come in only two categories: those who don't mind a bit spending money that they haven't got on pet projects of their own or of their senior bureaucrats, and those who will cut away at the budget unmercifully, no matter how much it costs in the long run.

Thankfully, Victoria does not appear to have any of the former on this year's council. Everyone is taking great care to be fiscally responsible, as the catch phrase goes.

The council does appear, however, to have a large number of the latter group among its members. They're making every effort to ensure that taxes for Victoria residents don't rise this year — certainly a worthwhile goal — but they're doing so by cutting items that will have to be done sooner or later and will doubtless be more expensive later.

Moreover, since Victoria council has been controlled by this group for several years, it has developed a virtual vicious circle of false economies.

Ald. Robin Blencoe, chairman of the public works committee, put the case well when he talked of the problems developing with the city's storm drains and sewer pipes. Council cut from the budget a plan to put an extra crew on maintenance and repair of the 500 miles of underground piping in the city.

The existing two crews will carry on with the job this year, Blencoe explained, but they are so busy unblocking plugged sewers that they have no time to repair other problems. Already 80 places have been found that need repairing — and that number will only grow in 1980 if no one has any time to repair them.

The end of the scenario is obvious: eventually the drains will become so run down that an emergency will develop, and the city will have to put out hundreds of thousands of dollars to fix them.

Somehow, however, that is easier on the politicians of the day because they can justify the expense on the grounds that it is a one-time emergency — and the residents couldn't possibly expect council to do anything other than fix it.

It is an emergency, to be sure — but it is an emergency that could have been avoided by appropriate preventive maintenance during the years before it arose.

The same sort of false economies are seen in the care of many other parts of the city plant — in park-maintenance, in road upgrading, in replacement of equipment. By saving money this year, when the expense would be needed but isn't urgent, the city is guaranteeing it will spend more money in some future year, once the problem has increased in severity.

This system has been going on for so long now that it will be difficult to break the cycle. The amount of urgent work is now significant enough, that the addition of any non-urgent jobs would probably mean a raise in taxes the community can ill afford.

All the same, as the aldermen continue to examine the budget, they should be asking themselves not just "How much can we save by not doing this in 1980?" but also "How much will it cost the taxpayer later on if we do leave it now?"

Sewage study needed

Victoria MLA Gordon Hanson has made a reasonable request when he urges the B.C. government to establish a full task force to examine pollution along the Greater Victoria shoreline.

The expanding number of beaches where the water is too polluted for swimming and the shellfish are too polluted for eating is a signal that something is seriously wrong.

The most likely cause of the problem is the amount of raw sewage and industrial waste that is being dumped into the ocean too close to shore. Sewage is, after all, the most usual reason for high bacteria and coliform counts along a shoreline, and no one doubts that large amounts of sewage are pouring untreated into the straits and bays surrounding southern Vancouver Island.

But even if, as Environment Minister Steven Rogers suggests, something else is causing the pollution, that is no reason to forgo an investigation. Perhaps it would be even more important to hold one in that case since nobody, including Rogers, can think of any rational alternative explanations for the high bacteria counts.

The Greater Victoria region cannot afford to have its shoreline problem continue to increase. The shore is one of the area's prime tourist attraction, and tourists will not be attracted for long to beaches liberally marked with signs warning them not to go near the polluted water or dig for the polluted clams.

A study, similar to the one now being conducted in the estuary of the Fraser, might cost the government a few thousand dollars now. Its recommendations might well cost more to implement.

But they might save Vancouver Island millions of tourist dollars in the long run.

KEITH WOOLHOUSE

A very, very quiet revolution

EDMONTON — Western Canada's quiet revolution towards independence is, in the opinion of many, so quiet that it is inaudible.

It competes with the Flat Earth Society and the Sasquatch for attention. That's not to say it doesn't exist. It does, and the other evening in the venerable Macdonald Hotel, perched on the bluff overlooking the North Saskatchewan River, things were really humming.

About 200 members of the Western National Association (WNA) gathered to discuss their plans to break away from Canada and form an independent nation to be named Western Canada. Outright independence is what these people are after. They're not going to mess around with such things as sovereignty association which would only blur the issue.

The decision to meet in the Macdonald — named after the father of Confederation — to discuss strategy was thus not without some irony.

Summer caravan

The meeting was a sample of what the four western provinces will experience in July when a WNA party caravan takes to the road to barnstorm through 21 cities in 30 days.

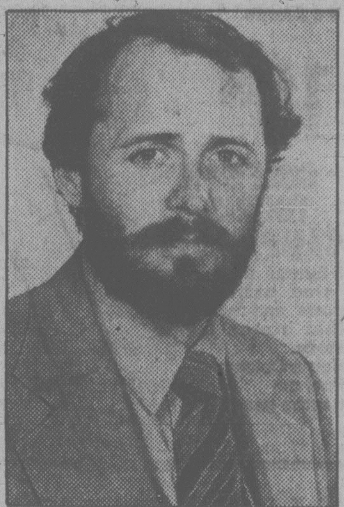
Even the lady from the French network of the CBC was there, presumably to send the word back to her compatriots that they might find themselves separated before they can say "Oui".

The reason why so few take the WNA seriously — even apart from their objective which is too silly for words — is that there is no youth movement; few supporters of any age turn out for their meetings and those who do are, for the most part, elderly. "Socreds gone to seed," as one fellow put it.

WNA chairman Douglas Christie wants to change all that. A 34-year-old lawyer from Victoria, B.C., he preaches his vision of a new land with evangelical fervor. With his black beard and lean appearance he looks not unlike Abe Lincoln and on this night he was helped by the dim lights of a solitary chandelier that left him bathed in a half-glow.

Although his sentences often ramble and it takes him ages to get to the point, Christie has a good speaking style. He speaks slowly and softly, wagging a finger admonishingly at nobody in particular, and his listeners hang on every word.

He tells them: "It is only a matter of time until the power of decision no longer rests with us and therefore at this time, while we can strike and while we have the ability to decide and the ability to choose, we must do so, and we must do so before that time passes, because time waits for no man . . . time moves, and quickly the exhaustible resources upon which your wealth and prosperity today are founded will disappear and be depleted.



DOUGLAS CHRISTIE
. . . only a few followers

"And where will they go? They'll go down the pipeline with all the jobs to the secondary industries of central Canada where the government of Canada wants them to go with all your votes.

"That's the way it is."

The audience applauds heavily.

For too long, he says, Ontario and Quebec have milked the West. That's why independence is the only way out. "The only option left, the only hope, is for the western provinces to band together and form a new nation — Western Canada."

He announces that the new party will run candidates in provincial elections and ultimately ask the governments of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to hold referendums on independence.

"Quebec doesn't want to be bilingual," he says, "and I don't think it should have to be. Quebec should speak French and Western Canada speak the obvious common language of English. I say that with no malice towards Quebec. They have the option of fulfilling their destiny, but not at our expense."

He described it as a "moment in history".

"We are preparing for the biggest political battle in the history of western Canada since 1885. The biggest political battle for the highest stakes short of war — the hearts and minds of western Canadians. Within each of you lies the potential to create the greatest political force that western Canada has ever seen."

Best friends are . . .

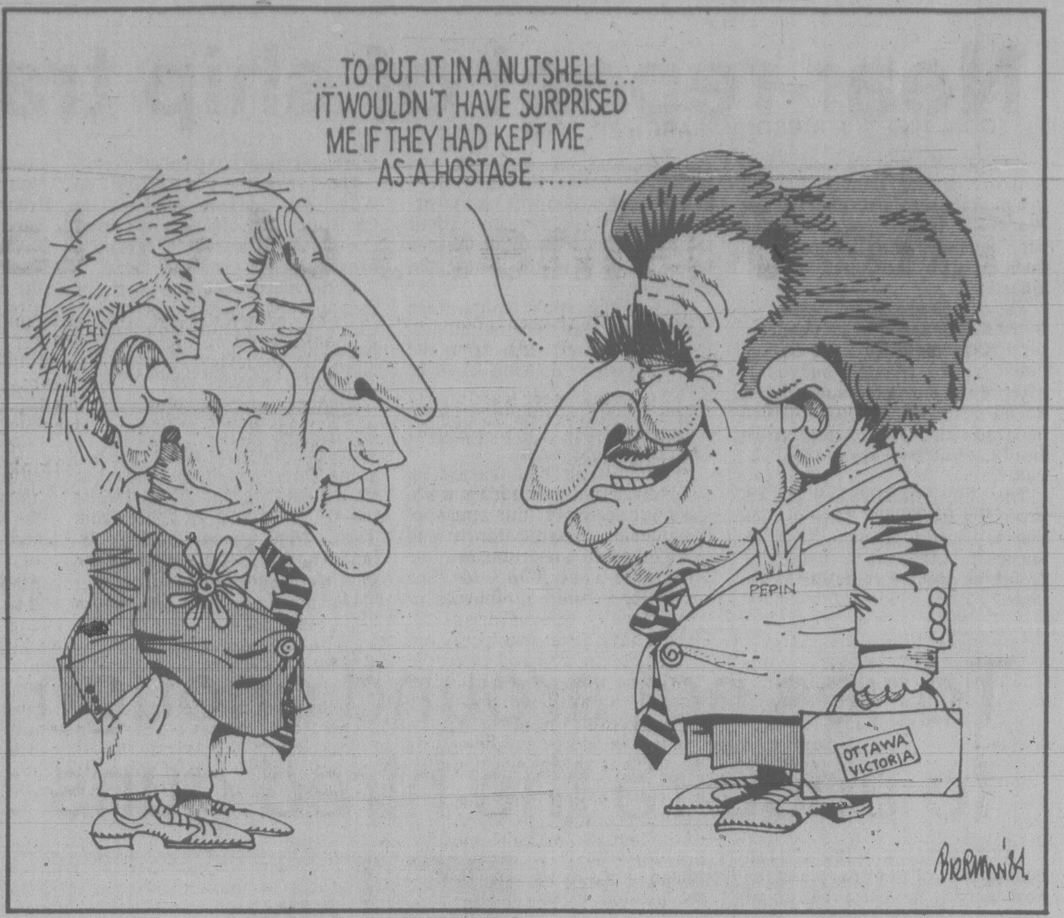
Heady stuff, indeed. And a pity that the lady from the CBC missed much of it. She left after 20 minutes shaking her head in despair (it may have been disgust) and wasn't there when the gloves came off. She didn't hear local businessman Elmer Knutson, who came close to winning the Progressive Conservative nomination in Edmonton South in the last election, give his definition of a francophone — "a French person who speaks English, votes Liberal and agrees with Trudeau."

Or the same speaker warn: "French Canada is on the march. Look out for your children, it's moving westward. Now, ladies and gentlemen, I am not anti-French. Some of my best friends are French."

Everybody got a laugh from that and they applauded mightily when Knutson, who last month had designs on living in Ottawa, concluded by saying that if western Canada couldn't be free, he'd have to leave the country.

That sort of fighting talk from a scrapper like Knutson, sent them home in high spirits and with the knowledge that like the Flat Earth Society and the Sasquatch, the WNA is not going to go away.

The only blessing is that it's unlikely to get any bigger, either.



. . . TO PUT IT IN A NUTSHELL . . . IT WOULDN'T HAVE SURPRISED ME IF THEY HAD KEPT ME AS A HOSTAGE . . . . .

Kicking a man who's down

BOSTON — There is one theory of political action that insists you should never kick a man unless he's down, and this nasty notion seems to be gaining in popularity these days.

The losers are being hunted like wounded animals. Even here in Boston, where political loyalty was supposed to have been invented, Sen. Edward Kennedy is being savaged by many of the old Kennedy supporters for letting the side down.

This was fair enough when Kennedy seemed to be a winner. It was essential to challenge his character, his record at Harvard, at the University of Virginia, his testimony on Chappaquiddick, and even his relations with his family and his after-dark adventures.

For in this secular age, presidents are not merely the administrators of a balanced budget or the balance of military power in the world, but the keepers of the hopes and ideals we want to put before our children. Edward Kennedy failed that task, but it seems a little stiff not only to reject him for his failures but to keep on punishing him for them. Despite his gains in Massachusetts and New York, he is undoubtedly finished.

Past privileges

It is interesting what you hear in Boston about the opposition to Kennedy on his own home turf. He is, if I hear things right, being made the object of a resentment against the past privileges of his family.

During the critical period of the last World War, there was that feeling of resentment against his father and his father's money and isolationist views, and the popular suspicion that the Kennedys were always a breed and a law apart: that they could do what was forbidden to others, and were thus raised to the pinnacle of American politics, even the presidency.

Jack Kennedy and Bobby and Teddy always seemed to be rising too soon, quicker than anybody else — getting to the House and Senate and even the White House before their time. But when Edward Kennedy stumbled, the resentments of the past rose up, and now there is not only a feeling of disappointment in him but almost a sense of revenge — that the Kennedys, after all their special privileges, must finally be reduced to the hard realities of all other mortal politicians.

This may not be a bad shuffle in the Kennedy deck. The clan now looks quite different. Watching them going through Harlem in the New York primary, suddenly Edward Kennedy and his brother's spectacular widow looked less theatrical but more sensible and middle-aged.

They have grown children now, with problems and sufferings of their own, and it may be that Edward Kennedy, who is now the head of the clan, may actually find relief in his defeat. After all, he has been a senator for over 17 years. He has had more experience on Capitol Hill than either of his murdered brothers. He is now chairman of the Judiciary Committee, a powerful post and formidable responsibility, and he has the respect of his peers.

Especially since he has made his mistakes and taken his beating from the administration and the press. This is not an argument for Kennedy's presidential campaign, but merely a suggestion that he has kept his temper and his sense of humor and doesn't deserve to be savaged in defeat.

No doubt Kennedy will go on through the rest of the campaign, arguing that Jimmy Carter's economic and foreign policies are an incoherent disaster, and that Ronald Reagan's amiable mystifying clarifications are even worse. And Kennedy will probably lose in the end, but in his present mood, this will be no tragedy.

The point here is merely that there is something to be said for the losers and they shouldn't be kicked around when they're down. Kennedy has merely run into that old law of compensation which another New Englander, Ralph Waldo Emerson, defined many long years ago.

"What we gain in power is lost in time," said Emerson. "For every grain of wit there is a grain of folly. For everything you have missed, you have gained something else, and for everything you've gained, you lose something."

Paid dear

That may be Kennedy's consolation, but Emerson also said something that Jimmy Carter, the farmer out of Plains, Ga., may find equally relevant.

"The farmer imagines power and place are fine things," Emerson added. "But the president has paid dear for his White House. It has commonly cost him all his peace, and the best of his manly attributes.

"To preserve for a short time so conspicuous an appearance before the world, he is content to eat dust before the real masters who stand erect behind the throne . . . this law writes the laws of cities and nations. It is in vain to build or plot against it. Things refuse to be mismanaged long."

This may be precisely Carter's problem today. Kennedy and Carter have been mismanaging their affairs for a long time, but Kennedy, the loser, is beginning to admit it while Carter, the winner, is still denying it. The odd thing is that Carter, with his proclamation of Christian compassion, hasn't been a little more generous to the losers.

Support ICBC

Re: In response to Mr. Goodes letter (March 2) criticizing ICBC:

I am not sure that it is correct to criticize the ICBC mandarins for the 1980 Autoplan changes (the FAIR program). It could well be it was the politicians.

It would appear that following the 1979 provincial election, when it was acknowledged that the young people had not supported the Socreds, a political decision was made by the Social Credit party. Bill 33 was passed in the legislature, and as a result the FAIR program was implemented.

One of the first steps was to start to eliminate the six different provincial regional rates and have one set rate for all regions. Another change this year is that rates have been lowered to end discrimination for young drivers under 25. These were political decisions more than actuarial decisions, and to many people this spelled bad news!

Many people have not been told that ICBC has first class fire insurance for their homes. The good news is that our old-age pensioners, as of Jan. 15, 1980, receive a 20 per cent discount on their residential fire insurance. Surely this indicates some sensitivity by ICBC for our senior citizens.

I realize that ICBC is fair game to be criticized by most people, but in the recent federal election, every political party spoke out in favor of repatriating Canada's economy. Had it been possible for Canadians to purchase public insurance since Year One, we would not have had the problems of foreign economic domination that we have today. Unfortunately, we cannot turn the clock back, but one of the most effective ways to start repatriating Canada's economy, regardless of politics, is for agents and homeowners alike starting to patronize our public fire insurance (ICBC).

The province of Saskatchewan is a good example of this, as they have had public insurance for 35 years. As a result, they have much more control of their economic destiny and a lower rate of unemployment than B.C. So much so, that B.C. contractors and tradesmen alike are moving to Saskatchewan. Public insurance has been a major factor in helping to change Saskatchewan from a "have not" province to a "have" province. It can be a great help in B.C. too. Let's support it! — William L. Hartley, 5005 Cordova Bay Road.

Getting it back

I happened to hear a few days ago a conversation between two elderly ladies who seemed to resent the fact that some senior citizens receive the basic old-age pension which "they don't need."

Let's put the facts straight once and for all. People who receive the OAP basic, with neither federal or provincial supplements, are mostly career persons who, during all their working years, contributed about one-third of their pay-cheques to their retirement fund. No interest was ever paid on these contributions for all the time the governments (federal and provincial) made use of that money, mostly destined for those who never put a nickel or a dime in the public coffers.

Secondly, in Canada the basic OAP is taxable, whereas social security is tax-exempted in the USA. Similarly, the Canada Pension Plan, also contributed partly by the workers, is considered part of a retiree's income and has to be declared in the income tax return.

If income tax returns and bank statements were not confidential matters, the two little old ladies would quickly realize that an exodus of "Prairie people" would be as harmful to the B.C. economy as a summer without tourists and probably more. — E. I. Lattes, 432-200 Dallas Road.

Tennessee thanks

We who comprise the governmental body of Hamilton County, Tennessee, of which Chattanooga is the seat, wish to take this means of expressing to the Canadian people our profound appreciation for the courageous stand taken by the Canadian government when several American citizens were secretly delivered from Iran.

Among those were Kathy and Joe Stafford, for whom this community is home. Therefore, we feel a special debt of gratitude to Canada, and all its people, for you have befriended, in such a vital manner, some of our own.

We hope that those of you who travel through our scenic area, on I-75 or otherwise, will sense in our citizens a special note of thanks in their southern hospitality.

We shall not forget. — Dalton Roberts, County Executive, and Paul McDaniel, Chairman, Board of Commissioners, Hamilton County Government.

The business of cutesiness

By BRADLEY MILLER
The Washington Post

How could any middle-aged man of the slightest dignity, or even a self-respecting schoolboy, write the following lyric?

When you give me that pretty little pout

You turn me inside-out.

Let alone sing it before crowds. James Taylor, being but sweet and 30 when he wrote it, is a spring chicken compared to many of the cutesy-pies fluttering and cooing across America. Probably a majority of them are over 40, and many of them are even worse than Sweet Baby James (the title of one of Taylor's albums). They make millions, some of them. Their spiritual guidance is sought. One of them is president of the United States.

To go by "Jimmy" — not James or Jim but Jimmy — is perhaps the most cutesy act ever committed by a sitting president. Well, why not? What could be more in tune with the spirit of our age? For that spirit, unless my eyes and ears deceive me, is not primarily hedonism or narcissism, but cutesiness.

The business of America may still be business, but the business of business has become cutesiness, i.e., an amazingly prevalent form of adult childishness, not to be confused with sentimentality or affectation, though the similarities are obvious.

Cutesiness usually takes the form of an affected archness that in certain susceptible roles — those assumed by Avon saleswomen and game-show hosts, for example — can easily flare up into cutesy-wootsiness, or the advanced stage of cutesiness. The cutesy-wootsy are not merely inane; they are infuriating. If they were condemned to death — and at the least they should be taken off the streets — they would walk to the gallows wearing a fixed smile and a Have A Nice Day button. They honk because they love Jesus, but I doubt that Jesus is amused. I dare say He's as revolted as any other genuine adult.

So despite more wars and rumors of wars, expect no Second Coming until society deals with this criminally inane class.

My point is that, far from trying to rid our society of this strain, we are simpering toward making it the ideal. Why the hell does cutesiness sell? To be sure, some adults have always remained children intellectually and emotionally, as everyone knows, and some have always simpered and postured for money and attention. But have so many ever simpered so much, or adopted postures that should revolt the instincts of even a politician and be psychologically impossible to anyone else? Surely not.

Even the enormous appeal of smut palls in comparison. The cutesy-pies, far from feeling ridiculous by what they do, leap at every chance to blabber away on talk shows about how wonderful and neat they consider one of their latest pieces of wit.

Let us not pistol-whip Poppin' Fresh, the Pillsbury doughboy — he's genuinely cute. Let us not pie-the-face Joe Namath on account of his panty-hose ad, because Joe, compared to the true cutesy-pies, is almost refreshing. And let us show restraint even in poking fun at the innocent doltishness of a born-again Sunday-school teacher.

For cutesiness is not quite any of those things. It is the artificially soft voices of mellow-music deejays, it is touchy-feeling psychologists, the schoolboy naughtiness that tries to add spice to TV talk shows, John Denver, movie-makers trying to be morally instructive, movie critics who feel morally instructed, Playboy bunnies thinking somebody cares that there are really so many things they really want to do, Cosmopolitan articles telling women how they can really do a lot of things and still look yummy, presidents of student bodies, Suzanne Somers, banquet speakers who try to be funny, banquet speakers who don't try to be funny, Paul Anka, grinning yaps on TV commercials who love to eat biscuits, hillbilly guitar players, the Dallas Cowboy cheerleaders, a commercial for U.S. Savings Bonds urging Americans to "invest in the United States — for sugar and spice and everything nice" (because bonds can pay for your daughter's wedding).

If TV advertising isn't the worst offender it is certainly the most visible. The TV blats seven hours a day in the average American home and is probably as responsible as anything for the impression, voiced so often by foreign visitors, that we're a nation of simpering mules, fat and happy perhaps, but unbelievably dumb. I cannot believe that we're the dumbest people in the world, yet why else would some ad agency assume that a good number of us fret that mouthwash might be "too mediciney"?

The assumption is doubtless correct: not for nothing are millions spent in market research both to discover and to stimulate such things. The assumption, indeed, seems to be that the imbecility of the audience is illimitable.

Consider the ad in which a bulwark of a Babbitt of a husband beams into the camera and purrs and coos, "My wife — I think I'll keep her," as the oh-so-sweet sweetie purrs and coos her gratitude. Is that off the air? Then consider the heroic character who now grins and chirps, "Squeeze, and go from flat to fluffy!"

The idea behind these things is that Americans not only won't retch and rage at them but will actually be inspired by them to buy the products being pushed. As I say, consider it, and see if it doesn't confirm P.T. Barnum's observation on the birth rate.

We ignore what we constantly inhale, but all the same it transforms us, and to live in America today is to constantly inhale cutesiness. For too long I too tried to ignore it, until it dawned on me that unless I actively opposed it, I could soon lose the capacity to distinguish cutesiness from genuine emotion and could become cutesy myself. Something as superficially harmless as joining a poetry-reading circle could be the start of a subtle corruption of the soul and psyche that would end with my going on a game show to smirk about my sex life in the hope of winning a washing-machine.

Laying it to greed merely begs the question of why cutesiness is so lucrative. I suggest the prime wellspring of cutesiness is the desire for attention, almost regardless of what kind of attention. A child will keep provoking his parents despite repeated punishment if punishment is the only attention he gets. The same motive, I fear, explains much of what Americans do as adults. The nature of most jobs makes it necessary for most of us to look for attention outside our jobs; the egalitarian orchestrators convince us that everyone, no matter how arrant a nitwit, is owed a share of the spotlight; finally, the worthies already in the spotlight prove to us that the more arrant one's nitwittery, the larger one's share.

I don't presume to be able to trace all the cause-effect development of cutesiness. It's enough to warn that the thing is snowballing, that more and more of us are becoming either inane posturers or their devotees. Already we are a nation of people who don't have to be drunk to like "Little House on the Prairie."

The real peril is that emotion that is mature, honest and honorable will drown in the sugar. At the least, passion will yield to giggles, and one will always need the sneer or snicker, or perhaps an impersonation of Richard Nixon, to indicate that, after all, one is not so unworldly as to be serious; at worst, nothing seriously describable as passion will even exist.

Whose love letters, even now, would be worth reading? Certainly no cutesy pie's. Rod McKuen's? Those of the PR wonder who thought up "Reach out, reach out and touch someone. Reach out, call up and just say 'Hi.' "? Is there a difference?

For the letters of the man who best represents our era, I'd choose, besides President Jimmy's, those of Alex Comfort, MB, PhD, editor of The Joy of Sex and More Joy of Sex, for Comfort's advice to lovers is oh, so precious that I quote from it:

"So let him be a Roman or a dog or a woman or a gangster, and let her be a virgin, or a slave, or a Sultana, or Lolita, or someone you're trying to rape, or indeed anything which turns either of you on. You weren't self-conscious about this when you were 3 — grow backward again in an adult context. The rules are only those of childplay — if it gets nasty or spiteful or unhappy, stop the game; while it stays wild and exciting, it has a climax childrens' games lack; that is the privilege of adult play."

But beneath the sugar, concealed from Comfort's glance, rage and rebellion are simmering and congealing into an army of rebel roughnecks who envision a climax rather different from Comfort's. Some in this army want to attack the Pepsi Generation and Coke-Adds-Lifers right now, and maybe even hold the gee-whiz kids hostage and puncture their volleyballs right before their eyes.

For it can hardly be disputed anymore that cutesiness causes crime, especially violent crime by the young. Of course it's not the chief cause, but there is no doubt that in violence, no less than in drugs, rock and sex, the young seek release from the sickly sweet smiles that confront them at all turns.

After constant exposure to all the gagging cutesiness of television, radio, movies, magazines and billboards, the young are soaked in the unctuous fuddy-duddyism of their parents and teachers. Unable to run away from cutesiness, they are run amok by it. Properly channelled, their natural rebelliousness could begin to clear cutesiness off the scene. The torch is theirs.

Miss Arthur frightens me.

Miss Catherine Arthur, executive assistant to Alberta Social Services Minister Ralph Bogle — Miss Arthur whom I will never meet — is as scary to me as a bat in the living room, not meaning any personal harm but all the more alarming for that, blundering blindly into your life and leaving behind a trail of shattering moments.

Miss Arthur came into my kitchen, via the newspaper, on a day when winter was being its most fluffily appealing outside and I was not thinking of this month's nastiest news item, the story about five disturbed children in a government-funded treatment centre in Peace River, Alta.

The story told how the five children in the home, most of them native children, all of them emotionally disturbed, had been punished according to the precepts of behavior modification.

A 13-year-old girl was forced to smear her menstrual blood on the bathroom walls. A 12-year-old boy, a bedwetter, was forced to urinate on his sheets, sleep on them, and then wash and dry them in the morning, missing his breakfast and walking the 3½ miles to school if he wasn't finished in time. At night, the child-care workers could hear him sobbing for hours in his wet bed.

A 9-year-old boy, a child who rarely speaks and is thought to be retarded, was punished for mixing up the sign language for food and drink. He was not fed. When he ate from the dog's dish on the porch, he was punished by being forced to eat dog food covered with Tabasco sauce.

When the same child could not or would not wash the dishes, he was forced to stand at the sink, hands in water, for 12 to 16 hours without food, drink or rest. The child-care workers, seeing him there at 3 a.m. with hands bloated from the water and a crust around his mouth from not eating or drinking, were told to walk by and ignore him.

My mind went skittering out of its comfortable paths when I read this story. I had to force myself not to think of my own trusting 9-year-old standing at that sink. For 16 hours. How does a 9-year-old boy stand there for 16 hours? Did he get sick from hunger and exhaustion? Did his legs tremble? Did he cry? Or did his eyes throb and this throat ache from not crying? How does it feel to be 9 years old, with no one in the world on your side?

We know whose side Miss Arthur is on. By Saturday, the reporters who exposed this story were asking the Alberta government to explain itself. "Listen, I'm 100 per cent sensitive to how this looks to the public when they first come across it," confided Miss Arthur.

Still, she said, forcing a child to sleep in his own urine or to eat pepper-spiked dog food are "common ways of behavior management, prescribed in thousands of papers written by professional psychologists and psychiatrists who say it's the present-day way of curing people of bizarre acts."

Aah. It's common, then. Nothing to worry about. Miss Arthur's language makes it all so clear. Note the nonchalance of "come across it," as though the torture of children were a daily commonplace among the insider-professionals, though a bit of a jolt to us sentimental proletarians when we first notice it. We'll get used to it.

And how reassuring, that appeal to quantity and to the blank-eyed deity of science. "Thousands" of articles. The present-day way. And notice Miss Arthur's final, spiteful verbal flounce: "I guess the alternative is to say we can't help disturbed children at all."

Uh-uh, Miss Arthur, not so fast. Disturbed children may act bizarre, all right, just as a wounded animal may snarl at its rescuer. But the "cure" is not to goad them in their open wounds. There are many humane and decent alternatives to the mental torture you defend.

We are well past the time when we genuflected as the naked Emperor of Science rode preening down the street.

There will always be a Miss Arthur, to defend the use of painful techniques on the powerless. But there will also be the ordinary, decent people, like those in Edmonton who are opening their homes to the five children, who trust their instincts enough to be outraged.

They know, even if Miss Arthur may not, that a sadist may wear a white coat, and cite thousands of articles, and smile and smile, and be a charlatan.

The birthing business

Russell Baker

NEW YORK — There has been an epidemic of pregnancy around here lately. I have seen two cases with my own eyes. It startled me a bit.

I was aware that pregnancy still raged unchecked in the backward latitudes of the earth and knew that a case occurred now and then even in the United States. Still, these seemed so rare that I had the impression medical science had pretty well stamped it out. I had begun to assume that pregnancy was a thing of the past, like smallpox and malaria.

This shows how out of touch you can get by concentrating too hard on your own navel and taxes. Medical authorities tell me that besides the two cases of pregnancy here in Manhattan, there are several others scattered around the country, including one in Washington, D.C.

You may be even more astonished to hear that pregnant folk no longer have to wait to find out whether they're going to have a boy or a girl.

Why anyone would want to know ahead of time I cannot say. When I was associated with pregnancy, I liked the surprise. In those days, babies always arrived just before dawn. The obligatory social form required the father to spend the night fully clothed in a room of institutional green, drinking coffee from cardboard cups and working up a heavy case of smoker's hack.

The father's job was to provide amusement for hospital personnel. You were supposed to be on duty at 4:30 a.m. with your tie loosened, your eyes glazed and your stomach a simmering cauldron of bad coffee.

In this state you served as an entertaining spectacle to interns and nurses, who would drop in to favor you with smiles of contempt before proceeding down the corridor to find a corner dim enough for a bout of tickle-and-slap.

Most fathers I met in these rooms understood their role, which was to play the fool before the professional audience. In those days, pregnancy always presented this problem for the male associate. Being useless throughout most of the experience, he could function only as comic support. Only at the penultimate moment could he dash into the street, flag a taxi and issue a man's command: "Get us to the hospital right away."

Other than that, the experience was humbling. It was, in fact, very much like doing the Christmas shopping. Every stage of both experiences seemed designed to remind you that you were incompetent, superfluous, absurd and, to the professionals — the nurses, the interns, the shrewd saleswomen at the perfume counter — contemptible.

But with pregnancy there was always the great moment that made all the suffering and anxiety worthwhile.

As at Christmas, it came at dawn when the surprise was presented. The door of the institutional green room opened for the hundredth time to admit a figure in white, not to sneer this time, but to smile. Your name was pronounced.

Breaking the damp seal that bound you to the plastic chair, you rose, reeking of cigarette smoke, the coffee gurgling ominously through your inner caverns, and awaited the news:

"It's a girl."

What a moment. The first time it happened, I telephoned half the town at 5:15 in the morning announcing: "A daughter! I have a daughter!"

Nowadays, I gather, everything is handled much better. At a civilized hour of the day, some months before the baby's scheduled arrival, mother and father dress smartly for the doctor. He does something incomprehensible with his computer, then hands them the readout.

"Congratulations," it states, "you are going to have a female person."

At the penultimate moment the father rushes into the street, flags a taxi and declares, "Get us to the hospital. We are going to have a daughter."

Throwing the meter, the driver says, "Big deal! My wife and I are going to have triplets next August — one son and two daughters. And what's more, one of the daughters is going to score in the high 700s on her S.A.T.'s and be admitted to Stanford, after which her earning power is going to average $80,000 per annum, adjusted for inflation, until her retirement at age 65."

I'm just kidding now. Science's ability to forecast isn't that good yet, but just wait a few years. Before long, they'll even be able to tell you in 1981 what you're going to get for Christmas in 1985.

Cattle

Receipts to 11 a.m. today at the Calgary public stockyards totalled 600 cattle and calves consisting of mostly slaughter cows and heifers with a light run of slaughter steers.

Trade was moderate from local buyers with a strong U.S. demand on all classes. There were too few slaughter steers sold to quote prices. A1-2 slaughter heifers traded steady with fancy kinds over 1,000 lbs. for export selling at $70.30. All grades of slaughter cows remained steady with sales to $52.50. Good bulls sold steady on the export market.

A1-2 heifers over 850 lbs. $67-69.20; A3-4 .63-66. D1-2 cows $50-52; D3-5 46-50. Good bulls $64-66.

Economy needs recession despite scars: economists

SEATTLE (AP) — Two national economists have told Seattle area bankers the best hope for the U.S. economy is a three-month recession that would leave deep economic scars but trim inflation to 10 per cent a year.

The worst scenario would wipe out mortgage loans and send commercial interest rates soaring to 25 per cent.

But John Rutledge, president of the California-based Claremont Economic Institute, thinks something in between is the most likely course for the economy.

He forecasts 18 per cent inflation this year, 16 or 17 per cent in 1981 and continued high prices. Also, there will be no real economic growth this year and puny growth in 1981 and 1982.

Lawrence Kudlow, chief economist for Bear Stearns £ Co. in New York, sees a recession lasting well into 1981. It will be a slowdown that will bounce the economy into a hard landing, but should ease inflation and interest rates.

Corporate earnings, however, would plunge some 17 per cent.

The two made their predictions at an interest-rate forecasting seminar sponsored by the Federal Home Loan Bank of Seattle on Tuesday.

New forest harvest technology needed

MONTREAL (CP) — The future of Canada's forest industry may depend on its ability to develop a high-technology harvesting system, a top official in the retail end of the industry has warned.

Jack H. Boyd, a manager of Weyerhaeuser Co. Ltd., told the annual meeting of the woodlands section of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association Tuesday that Canada's forest industry is facing high costs, lagging productivity and steep competition from Sweden and the southern United States.

The key for success in Canada, Boyd continued, is bypassing the disadvantages of small trees, labor scarcity, public land ownership and remote wood supply by developing large, super-productive harvesting, processing and transporting machinery.

McMillan in hall of fame

TORONTO (UPC) — H.R. MacMillan, a pioneer in British Columbia's forest industry, and Alphonse Desjardins, founder of Quebec's Caisse Populaire credit union movement, were among six businessmen named Wednesday for appointment to the Junior Achievement of Canada's Business Hall of Fame.

Frank McMahon, founder of one of the first all-Canadian exploration enterprises, Pacific Petroleums Ltd., and W. Garfield Weston, the biggest manufacturer of bread in the world, were chosen also.

Sir Herbert Samnuel Holt, who supervised the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway through the Rockies and construction of power plants in Quebec, was another laureate.

The Hall of Fame was established last year by the Junior Achievement of Canada to honor Canadians for "outstanding and enduring contributions to improve the products, the processes, the efficiencies, or the human relations of business."

The businessmen will be inducted April 8.

Future bright for Canadian steel production

Canadian Press

The future is bright for Canada's booming steel industry, says a Toronto analyst.

Even if a recession is on the way, says Roland Jones of Pitfield Mackay Ross Ltd., Canadian steel producers will emerge relatively unscathed.

In a recent interview, Jones predicted small production and shipment gains and lower earnings for Canadian steelmakers this year. But the stage will nonetheless be set for what will probably prove to be one of the longest and strongest capital spending booms in recent memory, he said.

That in turn should produce the longest uninterrupted period of growth in steel shipments since the early 1960s.

Jones said the Canadian steel industry has good reason to be optimistic about the 1980s. Steel producers had a boom year in 1979 primarily because of an increase in fixed business capital spending for plants and equipment.

Not only is this trend continuing, Jones said, but the threat of ever-increasing inflation is pushing many businesses into starting or proceeding with capital projects at record-high interest rates. They see it as the most practical alternative to paying much higher prices for the same facilities in the future.

Jones said capital spending has largely offset sectors of weakness in steel consumption, such as automobiles and durable goods.

He said the Canadian steel industry stands almost alone at the top of the worldwide steel industry in operating efficiency, technological advances and cost competitiveness.

With energy expected to remain a top-priority problem in the 1980s, there will probably be a concerted development of steel-intensive, energy-related capital projects such as hydro developments, oil sands plants and oil and gas pipelines.

Meanwhile, the lower Canadian dollar helps keep Canadian manufactured products, including those of high steel content, competitive in world markets.

The last two years saw gains of more than 12 per cent in steel consumption and Jones said there may be a contraction of two to three per cent this year.

But he said mill exports, which declined about 11 per cent in 1979, could recover with the help of industry efficiency and the weak dollar.

Jones said the major Canadian steelmakers are in good shape as far as manufacturing capacity is concerned.

Algoma Steel Corp. of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., and Dominion Foundries and Steel Ltd., (Dofasco) of Hamilton have recently completed major expansion programs.

The Steel Co. of Canada Ltd. (Stelco) of Toronto started a $365-million five-year program in 1978, which includes a major revamping of some facilities and installation of new equipment.

Jones said shares of all three companies are a good buy now, especially in view of the Toronto stock market's recent retreat.

On Monday, Algoma stock finished the day at $32¼, Dofasco at $32¾ and Stelco at $27½.

Jones predicted that Algoma's per-share earnings could drop to $7.75 this year from $8.65 in 1979, Dofasco's to $7.25 from $7.88 and Stelco's to $5.25 from $5.74.

But, he said, the companies have an enviable future ahead of them and "I believe the investor has to look beyond the current economic problems."

New loan payments all interest

TORONTO (CP) — Crown Trust announced Thursday the introduction of a six-month residential mortgage under which customers will pay interest but no principal.

Jack Whitely, president, told the company's annual meeting, "by not asking for any principal repayments on the loan, Crown will help reduce the borrower's monthly payments, something which is very much needed at the present time."

J. W. Beckerleg, vice-president of corporate development, said in an interview the new mortgage will be offered immediately at an annual interest rate of 15.75 per cent.

"Clients will have the opportunity at maturity to take any type of mortgage which Crown Trust is then offering," Beckerleg said.

That might include another six-month, interest-only mortgage if warranted, he said.

I. H. Asper, Crown Trust's chairman, told the annual meeting high mortgage rates are destroying Canadians' dreams of home ownership and he called for legal changes to prevent governments from causing inflation.

Asper said, "government monetary and fiscal policy, if not radically altered, will see the end of the single-family dwelling on a private plot of land, the forced sale of their homes by senior citizens whose incomes are not rising as fast as property taxes."

Will cash-hungry U.S. raid Canadian banks?

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — The Canadian money market could be headed for severe and costly disruptions as the effects of President Carter's credit restrictions begin to spill over here.

Federal officials in both countries are keeping a hawk-like watch on Canada's chartered banks, fearing that they might become a back-door source of huge loans at a time when borrowing is being restrained in the United States.

This would cause radical dislocations in the Canadian economy — many of them still unrecognized. For consumers, it would mean a painful new spurt in interest rates. For investors, it would mean a weakening of the dollar on world money markets. And for the newly elected Liberal government, it would mean a whole series of unexpected financial headaches.

So far — in the two weeks since Carter announced his credit controls — there has been little evidence of American borrowers lining up to get their hands on Canadian money. But Canada's potential as a borrower's escape route has not gone unnoticed.

In a series of interviews with economic analysts and spokesmen for the Bank of Canada, the chartered banks and the federal finance department this week, FP News Service discovered that talk of spillover from the U.S. program is not only spreading, but causing considerable uneasiness.

"We're braced for some impact," said one senior banking official. "But right now we're just waiting to see how they (U.S. borrowers) respond."

The scenario that would send the biggest jolt through Canada's money markets works something like this:

A powerful American multinational with ambitious expansion plans collides headlong into Carter's credit controls. It needs a large loan to finance a merger or corporate takeover, let's say.

But money has suddenly become hard to get because the president's March 14 guidelines call on the banks to limit their credit expansion to an ungenerous six-to-nine per cent.

To make matters worse, the long-term bond market — the second major source of business financing — has all but collapsed in the last few months.

Determined to grow, the corporation looks a little further afield for a loan.

The company treasurer checks the cost of borrowing in Canada. Not great, but not bad. The company has two options:

The most obvious approach is for the treasurer to phone the international division of one of Canada's big chartered banks in Toronto or Montreal and negotiate a loan in U.S. currency. (Using the Canadian bank's branch office in Chicago or New York is out of the question because such subsidiaries of foreign banks fall under Carter's controls).

At first glance, it looks as if he has outsmarted the U.S. Treasury, but on closer examination, he sees the glaring flaw in this approach. As soon as officials of the two governments begin examining the Canadian bank's monthly lending figures, they are sure to detect what the multinational is up to.

There is a much cleverer technique. The company president calls up the manager of his firm's Canadian subsidiary. He instructs the branch manager to take out a business loan at the best rate he can get from one of the Canadian chartered banks. The money is to be in Canadian dollars. No one need know whom it is for.

> President Carter's credit curbs have caught U.S.-based multinationals in a squeeze. They may turn a hungry eye on the cheaper loans available from Canadian banks with potentially disastrous effects on Canadian finances.

Once the Canadian manager has secured the loan, he sends the money down to head office, where it is converted into U.S. currency, thus strengthening the demand for American greenbacks, while creating a market surplus of Canadian dollars and weakening it further.

"It's an ingenious system," admitted a Bank of Canada official. "But we're aware of it and we have ways of monitoring that kind of thing."

Spokesmen for several of the chartered banks said they, too, would be on the lookout for a mysterious onslaught of loan applications from branch plants of U.S.-based multinationals in the next few months.

One senior banking official said he doubted his bank or any other major chartered bank would look kindly on such borrowers.

"It's an obvious loophole in the U.S. program and most banks would probably respond negatively," he said.

However, this be-kind-to-Uncle-Sam stance was sharply at odds with the comment of another senior banker who confessed: "If IBM or Ford came to us for five or 10 million dollars, it would tough to turn them away."

At today's prime lending rate of a record 15.75 per cent, one can hardly help suspecting that many loan officers might be inclined toward this open-door approach.

And this is where the trouble for the Canadian economy could begin. Economists foresee a number of disfigurations in the market growing out of a possible U.S. borrowing frenzy:

— Competition for loan money would intensify. This would drive up interest rates even further, affecting not only corporate borrowers, but also hitting all the so-called little guys who borrow — farmers who need bank financing for their machinery, small businessmen seeking loans to avoid bankruptcy, homeowners faced with mortgage renewals and hundreds of other ordinary consumers.

— When dozens of U.S. multinationals began converting their newly secured loans from Canadian currency to their own money, all kinds of unwanted Canadian dollars would be dumped on the international money market. That surplus of Canadian dollars would lead to a drop in both the desirability and international buying power of Canadian currency. A weak dollar makes imports expensive — and that hurts anyone who buys coffee or clothing, a Toyota or a television, oranges or olives.

— The faltering Canadian dollar would give money market traders the jitters. This would damage Canada's reputation as a solid, stable country in which to do business. The country could lose contracts and the government would be under pressure to intervene heavily in world money markets — a messy, unpopular task, as Jean Chretien quickly learned 18 months ago when he was finance minister.

At the moment, these disturbing wrenches in the day-to-day business of the nation are still theoretical. Whether they balloon into genuine problems depends on a number of imponderables:

— Are major U.S. corporations going to be sufficiently hampered by Carter's "voluntary" credit controls that they'll look for money outside their own country?

— Are they in a strong enough financial position, in today's faltering economy, to want to borrow money to expand anyway?

— If they decide to borrow, would they want to risk the uncertainty of taking out huge loans in Canadian dollars?

— Would the U.S. government police this kind of lending? Carter's guidelines say, "Foreign banks will be asked to respect the substance and spirit of the guidelines in their loans to U.S. borrowers or loans designed to support U.S. activity."

— What role would the Canadian finance department play? The Bank of Canada? The chartered banks?

There are so many unanswered questions that no one in the financial community is willing to talk specifics yet. All they'll say is that the Canadian money market would look distressingly small and vulnerable if its next-door-neighbor suddenly became money-hungry.

Most banks here prepared for curbs

FP News Service

OTTAWA — All but two of Canada's 11 chartered banks are unhappily preparing to live with credit controls in the United States.

Nine Canadian banks have a sufficiently large impact on the U.S. economy that they fall under President Carter's March 14 guidelines.

This means they will be required to submit monthly financial statements to the U.S. government. It also means their U.S. branch offices — just like the large American domestic banks — are under pressure to limit the growth of their commercial lending to a meagre six-to-nine per cent.

The Canadian banks caught in the controls are, in order of size: The Royal Bank with assets of $54 billion, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce with assets of $48 billion, the Bank of Montreal — $39 billion, the Bank of Nova Scotia — $37 billion, the Toronto-Dominion Bank — $29 billion, Bank Canadian National — $15 billion, Mercantile Bank of Canada — $3 billion, Bank of British Columbia — $2 billion and the Continental Bank of Canada — $1.5 billion.

The two not on the list are the Canadian Commercial and Industrial Bank and the Northland Bank — both small Alberta banks.

Hugh Brown, a banking analyst at Burns Fry Ltd. estimates that Canadian banks loaned out $17 billion in the United States last yea

But he figures that only about a third of those were genuine loans. The rest were what is known in the business as interbank loans: when the Royal Bank, for instance, places a 30-day deposit in the Chase Manhattan Bank of New York.

The interbank money market is huge. In fact, the ability it offers a banker to convert an apparent loan to cash and back again, at will, offers the Canadian banks so much flexibility in their lending activities that some analysts doubt that Carter's restraints will even touch them.

Another fact Brown likes to point out is that the $17 billion-worth of lending that Canadian banks do in the United States is only a drop in their $230-billion bucket.

Gas exports way cleared

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada and the United States have reached a new agreement that will allow monthly changes in the price of Canadian natural gas exports and give the U.S. more notice of future increases.

Energy Minister Marc Lalonde made public Wednesday details of the understanding — two days after an agreement in principle had been reached at a meeting here with U.S. Energy Secretary Charles Duncan.

The agreement — some details of which were revealed Tuesday in the U.S. — takes effect April 1 and rules out increases in the current export price of $4.47 U.S. per 28 cubic metres (1,000 cubic feet) before July 1.

Lalonde said the agreement would "minimize the possibility of misunderstandings" with the United States and prevent disruptions in Canadian exports.

Concern about the timing of the last increase led the U.S. energy department to block three new applications for imports from Canada and to defer decision on three others.

The agreement clears the way for new exports of gas to the U.S., particularly those by Pan-Alberta Gas Ltd. scheduled to begin late this year.

Airports urged to boost skiing

Airports in the B.C. Interior must be opened up to international traffic, if only on a charter basis, to expand ski industry development in the province, says a study of B.C. ski areas.

Sno Engineering Inc. prepared the study for the federal and provincial governments which are co-operating in a joint venture called the Travel Industry Development Subsidiary Agreement.

Eight areas were studied, three in the Okanagan and the rest in the southwestern part of the province. The ski areas on Vancouver Island, the Lower Mainland and the Whistler-Blackcomb area do not fall under the subsidiary agreement.

If the B.C. ski industry is to develop as a major tourist attraction, the study says, all agencies within the province should develop a co-ordinated approach.

It recommends that B.C. ski tourism offices be established in primary markets to package skiing, promote B.C. tourism, establish ties with clubs, tour operators, travel agents and ski advocacy groups, and expand air and ground transit links to the Interior.

The Okanagan ski areas — Apex Alpine, Big White Ski Village and Silver Star — are similar and should be marketed together, the study says.

"Due to the size and lack of alpine environment in these communities, any marketing program will necessitate a strong effort in creating the apres-ski atmosphere," the study says. "The goal for the Okanagan should be to improve the over-all tourism performance of the region."

The winter climate and alpine setting in the East Kootenay, plus big mountain scenery give the Kimberley, Fernie and Panorama areas potential for larger scale development, and the location near Alberta and national park areas is a major marketing advantage, the study says.

It's high praise indeed when 97 out of 100 owners say they'd buy another Mazda 626.

It's true. The December '79 issue of Popular Mechanics reported that a nationwide U.S. survey, based on 2,290,608 owner-driven miles, found 97% of Mazda 626 owners would buy another. High praise indeed. We think we know why:

Performance. The 626 is probably the finest aerodynamically designed car in its class. Its performance capabilities could be favourably compared to BMW. Under the hood of that beautiful body is a 2000cc overhead cam piston engine that not only delivers an excellent thrust of power which is common with luxury cars, but also delivers excellent fuel economy which is not so common with many luxury cars. Transport Canada's comparative fuel consumption rating for the 626 5-speed is 8.4 litres/100 km (54 km/gal).*

Durability. The 626 was built to eat up the road not vice versa. That's because extensive rust-fighting measures were taken. There's plastic separating the vulnerable metal-to-metal contact areas, electrocoated paint application on body parts, plastic inner front fender liners, a chip protective vinyl coating on the rocker panel and anti-corrosive oil sprayed inside key areas.

To prove how well a 626 is expected to stand up, Mazda stands behind a 3-year anti-perforation warranty. All in all, you get the kind of durability you'd expect in a Volvo.

Engineering. The combination of MacPherson strut suspension in the front and a 5-link suspension in the rear plus front and rear stabilizer bars gives the 626 the ride of an expensive European car. And the cornering of a sportscar. Handling is superb because the 626's steering system is patterned after the Mazda RX-7. You could measure the engineering characteristics with those of Mercedes. And the luxury standard features on the 626 are usually anything but standard.

Like orthopedically contoured reclining front bucket seats with a lumbar support and height adjustment in the driver's seat. Versatile split rear seats where either or both seats fold down for more trunk space. Plus velour interior. AM/FM stereo. Electric clock. Electric trunk release. 5-speed transmission. Rear window defroster. Styled steel wheels. Tinted glass. Map pockets. And more.

Affordability. While the 626 can be compared to the fine European luxury cars, you'll be delighted to find it's priced in the same league as the Honda Accord.

The Mazda 626 – a car with luxury appointments, coupled with superb performance at an affordable price. See the 626 at your Mazda dealer now.

Hudson's Bay Company

civic affairs

In four days (April Fool's Day, appropriately) you become the proud owner of a one-fourth share in the Victoria bus system. What's going to happen?

Next Tuesday morning, the fare will still be 50 cents and the same drivers will be operating the buses.

Most of the initial changes will be on paper, but in a few months or a year it could be a very different transit system.

At midnight Monday ownership of B.C. Hydro's fleet of buses and all of the employees of the Crown corporation's transit division will transfer to a new creature called the Metro Transit Operating Co. Its job in the new scheme of things will be to provide the supervisors, drivers and mechanics to keep the fleet of several hundred vehicles on the road in Greater Victoria and Vancouver.

Despite its important role, the company is destined for a low profile. Its name will never appear on the buses it operates and MTO will never become a catchy acronym in the headlines. It's strictly an operating company with no responsibiliy for planning changes or innovations, except the day to day juggling necessary to keep to the schedule.

That will be the role of the Urban Transit Authority, the quasi-independent agency under the ministry of municipal affairs, and the regional districts of Victoria and Vancouver.

The UTA was established by the government as a mechanism to pay the 75 per cent provincial share of the transit deficit, and to extend bus service to other parts of B.C.

It's a planning body, a function which overlaps the Vancouver and Capital regional districts. In the smaller communities of B.C. with buses — Nanaimo and Penticton for example — the UTA arranges everything. Here and in Vancouver, there's a certain amount of confusion over responsibilities and jurisdictional divisions between the regional transit planners and the UTA transit planners.

Starting next week, the Capital Regional District and the Greater Vancouver Regional District have to pay the other 25 per cent of the cost not covered by fares. (The formula will change over five years to 60-40.) For that share of the bill, they get to decide what changes and improvements will be made in the bus system, although if the recent past is any indication, the UTA will skillfully "guide" the regional directors through uncertain ground.

The most obvious change will be an increase in electricity bills. Your next bimonthly bill is going to include a $2 surcharge to meet the Capital Regional District's estimated $2 million share of the local transit red ink, more if you own a business within the CRD.

Another visible change will be the new color scheme of the buses. One morning this spring regular riders out in Langford will shuffle forward in the queue and board their bus, newly painted in bright orange. It's the same color that now runs down the sides of Hydro's buses in a narrow stripe, but the UTA design is going to be visible from half a mile. There will be a half-metre wide stripe running down the sides of the bus from a solid orange front end.

Gradually, all buses will be repainted. Transit patrons on the Saanich Peninsula and in the Western Community will be the first to see it because their vehicles need repainting soon.

Their buses were bought six years ago in the eastern U.S. during the NDP government's big push to expand transit. The logo "New Jersey Tours" is starting to show up beneath the peeling paint.

Another highly visible change will probably be the death of the city's Freewheeler bus, the mid-day fare-free zone in downtown Victoria.

Unless the city votes more money to keep it going, the new transit paymasters on the CRD are going to let the six-month experiment (its $42,000 cost was financed equally by the UTA and the city) expire at 3 p.m. Monday.

The planners think a pass system would be better, either a special downtown ticket which merchants and businesses could sell at subsidized rates to lure shoppers and employees out of their cars or a daily or monthly pass good on the entire bus system.

The mortgage company is demanding $5,000 from Grace Juch — immediately

Why wait? 'Take it now'

Singing the Mortgage Blues

By PAUL MINVIELLE

The first mortgage on Grace Juch's strata title home isn't due for a couple of years yet, but she's so discouraged with the way mortgage interest rates are going she's ready to say: "Take it now."

The former nurse's aide is demoralized because her second mortgage has fallen due and the company that holds it wants $5,000 — now.'

After seeing her two boys — Paul, 12 and Stephen, 11 — off to school this morning, the 58-year-old Mrs. Juch (pronounced Yooke) sat in her nicely furnished living room and related the events that prompted her decision to prepare to give up her strata-title duplex.

What's given her a glimmer of hope is the crusade of Saanich hairdresser Ena Curran, 4171 Borden, who is supporting the cause of Viv Woolford of Mississauga, Ont.

Since a Times story about her, Curran has been deluged with calls and mail from people who are sinking under ever-greater mortgage payments.

Grace Juch is one of those victims.

There was a time when things were going well for the Juch family.

They had six kids, a boat and a trailer and they did a lot of camping.

"We haven't got anything like that any more," she said.

Her husband's Armed Forces salary was adequate to live on, even after the couple split up.

Her husband's support payments and her $1,000-a-month job as a nurses' aide enabled her to buy the three-bedroom house at 3034 Glen Lake Road in Langford for $51,900 three years ago.

Her payments on the 10¼-per-cent mortgage were $435, including taxes.

There was also a second mortgage of $4,725 at 12 per cent, another $50 a month.

Then she was injured and forced to quit her job.

She collected compensation for a time, as well as unemployment insurance. Canada Manpower paid to retrain her and she emerged a trained bookkeeper — right into a labor market top-heavy with trained bookkeepers.

Then her husband retired. His separation allowance paid some of the couple's old bills, but his help to the family dropped to half the mortgage payment, or about $220.

So Mrs. Juch just survived as best she could.

It was last July when she noticed her second mortgage cheque hadn't gone through her bank.

Curious, she made some phone calls and was told the holder of the mortgage, Unicon Homes of Victoria, had gone bankrupt.

It wasn't until later she learned that Price, Waterhouse and Co. was handling the affairs of the bankrupt firm.

She asked where she should send her cheques. No one seemed to know but she was told someone would get back to her.

No one ever called.

The mortgage fell due Jan. 1, 1980. Mrs. Juch phoned Jan. 16, but no one could tell her anything.

When she finally did hear from the company, she was told she owed $4,901.76.

Although there was no explanation as to how Price, Waterhouse had arrived at that figure, Juch's lawyer figured the company was entitled to it.

Mrs. Juch disagreed, saying some of the extra cost was the company's fault.

Juch checked to see if the second mortgage amount could be tacked on to her first.

She was told the mortgages could be combined into a new mortgage at 15¾ per cent.

Mrs. Juch would have to pay legal fees and all costs of the new mortgage.

"It was just like a new application," she said.

The monthly payment would go from $435 to $650.

"I didn't even qualify for it," Juch said.

As she began to think about the future, she realized that when her first mortgage comes due in two years, she'll probably have to give up the house.

"If I don't qualify for it now at 15¾ per cent, what's it going to be like two years from now?"

"There comes a time when you have to dig in your heels," Juch said.

There was still $2,000 left from her husband's separation allowance.

She offered it to Price, Waterhouse to pay out the second mortgage.

Her lawyer doesn't think they'll go for it.

"If they don't," Juch declared, "they can take the house — right now."

Suspect held in smash-grab

A 20-year-old man is to appear in court charged with a smash-and-grab incident in which $1,863 worth of jewelry was taken from a Fort Street display window early today.

Police said a nearby resident heard the sound of breaking glass and saw a man reach in and take something from Stadacona Jewellery Shoppe, 1516 Fort, then run west to a sidestreet.

Police stopped the suspect near 1019 Pemberton and recovered rings valued at $447.

But other items worth $1,416 are still missing.

Earlier, police received reports of two daylight burglaries involving the theft of about $2,250 worth of gold, silver and coins from two houses on Mt. Stephen.

Police said a thief hit the home of Robert McMillan, 2695 Capital Heights, by entering through a rear door.

Stolen were a gold charm bracelet valued at between $2,500 and $3,000, a $300 gold watch, a $100 gold wedding band and $10-$15 worth of silver coins.

In the second theft at the nearby home of Noreen Falconberg, 12 Hayward Heights, a patio door screened by shrubbery was forced open and a $75 gold pendant, a silver cross and chain valued at $50, and a gold watch of undetermined value were taken.

Two killed near Duncan

Two persons were killed when a car hit a tree Wednesday night seven kilometers south of Duncan.

An RCMP spokesman said the driver and one passenger died in the Koksilah Road crash.

Another passenger received minor injuries and was taken to Cowichan District Hospital.

Names are being withheld until families have been notified.

Average marks for free buses

By NORMAN GIDNEY

The downtown Freewheeler bus experiment due to expire Monday gets only average marks in an evaluation study carried out by the Urban Transit Authority.

Its survey of B.C. Hydro officials, downtown Victoria merchants and shoppers who parked in civic parkades found a lack of awareness of the free-fare zone, but a potential for some form of free transit.

Hydro, which operated the demonstration service at a cost of $42,000 over the last six months for the UTA and the city, recommends that it be scrapped.

Bus drivers found that the 22-square block free zone confused riders, especially the elderly, and delayed the schedule.

From 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. all buses travelling through the downtown sector bounded by Blanshard, Herald, Wharf and Belleville are free. It was designed to ease traffic congestion in the core area by providing an alternative means of getting around.

But anyone who boards here and rides outside must exit by the front door and pay the fare.

"This has been confusing and unsettling to individuals accustomed to paying a fare on boarding a bus and has been a constant source of complaint to B.C. Hydro transit," says the UTA report.

"Further, at the destination point patrons cannot leave by the rear door which has also become an irritant. Finally transit patrons have also appeared confused over the time the program is in effect and forget the start and finish times which can lead to confusion and misunderstandings with transit operators."

Downtown merchants thought there wasn't enough promotion of the Freewheeler zone, but 82 per cent want it continued. Twenty-eight per cent saw an increase in business activity which they attributed to the scheme.

Sixty per cent said their staff used the Freewheeler bus, but only six per cent did so daily. Twenty-eight per cent rode once a week, while 59 per cent said "occasionally."

The UTA says the results from merchants indicated a favorable response to free downtown transit. Questionnaires distributed in late February to shoppers at city parkades in mid-day brought similar results.

Eighty-three per cent were aware of the Freewheeler. Twenty-two per cent had used the bus — four per cent daily and another four per cent several times a week. Ten per cent said they used it once a week and 12 per cent once a month.

Ten per cent of the shoppers said it was an incentive to come downtown and 17 per cent said it made it easier to get around (versus 83 per cent who said it made no difference).

The UTA study says the results from shoppers indicate a potential for greater use, given better promotion of a free transit plan.

It conludes that the complaints and survey results suggest limitations to the present scheme and poses alternatives:

— A fare-free shuttle bus (which the city paid for two years ago) or with a nominal fare, such as 10 cents.

— A downtown transit pass, either issued free by parkades and merchants, or sold by bus drivers and stores.

The UTA encourages the second option.

RJH backs doctors on obstetric unit

By BRENDA DALGLISH

Royal Jubilee Hospital directors couldn't say enough good things Wednesday night about a doctors' committee fighting for the right of the hospital to keep its obstetric unit.

Four members of the committee, including chairman Dr. Scott Wallace, spoke to the board which agreed to offer its full support.

Wallace said the committee was formed after a unanimous vote of members of the active medical staff of the hospital.

The committee plans to fight the Capital Region District's health planning commission's proposal to centralize all obstetric facilities — except for emergency cases which will be handled at any hospital — at the new Victoria General Hospital on Helmcken Road.

The RJH board earlier tried unsuccessfully to get the health commission to change its plan and Wallace said he doubts there is much more it could do.

Wallace said the doctors are prepared to spend their own money on a campaign which will include newspaper advertising and possibly radio and television advertising.

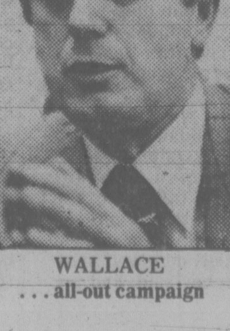
In addition, the seven-member committee has offered to speak to interested groups about the subject.

"We're in this in a very serious way and we're not going to give it up until this stupid decision is reversed," Wallace told the board.

Pressure from the public, he said, may be what's needed to persuade the commission.

Wallace said the doctors' objections are based on concern that obstetrics is being treated as a highly specialized field of medicine, like cardiac surgery, renal dialysis or burns treatment.

But in fact, he said, obstetrics is a natural function that in the vast majority of cases doesn't need a great deal of equipment.



WALLACE

. . . all-out campaign

Wallace pointed to the two extremes of opinion that seem to be developing in obstetric theory: one favors more home births while the other suggests more specialized care.

"Some experts have gone so far as to say every mother should be monitored and every baby should have a terminal screwed into its skull," said Wallace.

But, he said, one important factor is the need for the doctor to be present at certain times to prevent or handle problems that can develop.

Because of the distance of the new hospital from most doctor's offices, Wallace said, centralizing the obstetrics facility might cause more harm than good.

He said he found a number of contradictory decisions while researching the matter.

"If I care to give all my energy to this and document their past actions I think their (the commission) performance will be shown to by abysmal."

Wallace claimed centralizing the service will not provide better care or be cost-efficient.

Booze, broads and baseball make bad mix

Booze and baseball — mix 'em and weep.

That's the sermon big Don Newcombe is carrying to the ears of every major league player willing to listen in a baseball-sponsored tour of all the training camps in Florida, Arizona and California.

"Not just baseball — booze and any kind of business don't mix," warns the gargantuan former pitcher of the old Dodgers, both Brooklyn and Los Angeles variety. "Nobody knows that better than I do."

The 6-foot-4, 240-pound former Cy Young winner is like a barnstorming evangelist as he moves from one site to another preaching the evils of Demon Rum and other spirits.

"I was a wild one in my day," he recalls. "I never wanted to go home after a ballgame. I wanted to go some place and live it up. I was a happy-go-lucky, free-wheeling drunk. I was heavy on both booze and broads.

"It shortened my career. It bankrupted me in business. Worst of all, it almost broke up my home. My marriage at one time hung by a very slender thread. I am lucky my whole life wasn't ruined."

Newcombe managed to right himself before tragedy struck and, as a result, became a militant spokesmen against alcohol.

At the baseball winter meetings in Hawaii in 1977, he made a presentation to team physicians. Dr. Frank Jobe, an orthopedic surgeon in Los Angeles, was so impressed he persuaded the Dodgers to set up an alcoholic rehabilitation program.

News of the good work achieved in the Dodgers' program reached the office of commissioner Bowie Kuhn in New York. Kuhn named Newcombe a consultant to work with Leslie Gray, a staff member in Washington of the U.S. National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism.

Newcombe and Gray made their first tour of the spring training camps two years ago, appearing before 25 of the 26 clubs.

Only New York Yankees were missed.

"Billy Martin didn't want us to appear," Newcombe said.

The pair gave its message to Pittsburgh Pirates in Bradenton, Fla., and closed the Florida portion of the tour in the camp of Boston Red Sox in Winter Haven.

Then it was off to the West where this time they found little objection from the subdued Martin, new manager of Oakland A's. Billy announced to the world recently that he is off the juice for a month.

The crusade is already reaping dividends. Bob Welch, one of the Dodgers' impressive young pitchers, took a treatment over the winter in Arizona. A couple of weeks ago, Newcombe was asked to rescue a former pitcher who had locked himself in a room and was "drinking himself to death."

Newcombe, director of community relations for the Dodgers, recalled how excessive drinking had turned a brilliant career into disarray.

"I was rookie of the year with a 17-8 record in 1949," he said. "Then I won 17, 19 and 20 games in succession before going into military service. My first full season after that, in 1955, I was 20-5. In 1956, I was 27-7, named the National League's most valuable player and winner of the Cy Young Award.

But within four years it was all down hill.

"I won only seven games in 1958. I was traded to Cincinnati. I was through with baseball at age 33. I operated a successful cocktail lounge in Newark but I almost lost my wife and three kids.

"My wife, Billie, told me, 'When you don't drink, you are a beautiful man. When you drink, you are an animal and I don't want to live with that kind of an animal.' She was ready to pack her bags."

That was when Newcombe turned over a new leaf.

"Right now, if I took a thimble and filled it with beer, she would walk out on me," he said. "I don't want that to happen to anybody."

Pacers can't win even by winning

By The Canadian Press

Indiana won but came up a loser; Milwaukee didn't play and came up a winner.

Indiana Pacers beat Detroit Pistons 124-114 Wednesday night but were eliminated from the National Basketball Association playoff chase anyway when Houston Rockets topped San Antonio Spurs 113-101.

Milwaukee Bucks had the night off but gained a first-round playoff bye when Kansas City Kings dropped a 106-100 decision to Golden State Warriors.

In other games, Boston Celtics beat New York Knicks 129-121, Philadelphia 76ers edged Atlanta Hawks 89-84, Phoenix Suns defeated Seattle SuperSonics 109-99 and Chicago Bulls topped Denver Nuggets 122-115.

Being outstanding not good enough

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP) — Scott Mallender, the Windsor Lancers quarterback named the outstanding intercollegiate football player in the country last year, has been waived through the Canadian Football League.

Mallender was told last week Toronto Argonauts, who pursued him vigorously after the 1979 season before signing him, were putting him on waivers without giving him a tryout.

Tommy Hudspeth, Toronto general manager, said Mallender didn't fit into new head coach Willie Woods immediate plans.

"I think they got cold feet and didn't want to face the possibility of another Jamie Bone case," Mallender said Wednesday.

The CFL rights to Bone, the former Western Ontario quarterback and, like Mallender a former Hec Crighton Award winner, were acquired by Hamilton Tiger-Cats.

When Bone was cut by Ticats during the 1978 training camp, the Halifax native claimed he wasn't given a chance to show his credentials and launched a complaint with the Ontario Human Rights Commission against the CFL's import designation rule as it related to quarterbacks.

The courts eventually ruled in Bone's favor and ordered the Ticats to pay the former college star $10,000 and give him another chance to prove himself at training camp.

Bone, however, opted for a National Football League contract with Dallas Cowboys.

Mallender's coach, Gino Fracas, said the latest manoeuvrings by the CFL could have serious ramifications.

"There have been discussions (concerning the CFL) within CUFCA (Canadian Universities Football Coaches Association), but we have made little headway," Fracas said.

"I think Canadian university athletes are being badly misused (by the CFL)," said Fracas, a former pro with Edmonton Eskimos.

Fracas indicated CUFCA may eventually ban their practices and game film to CFL teams. The matter has been under discussion by the associaton for some time.

He said only two or three CFL teams, mentioning specifically scouts Frank Morris at Edmonton and Bob O'Billovich with Ottawa Rough Riders, as showing anything more than passing interest in Canadian college players.

Unlike Bone, however, Mallender doesn't want to rock the boat.

"In defence of Argonauts, Hudspeth said they felt the best thing was to make the move (putting Mallender on waivers) now rather than bring him to camp with four or five players in front of him," Fracas said.

Mallender agreed, saying it was better than "letting it run into a token tryout."

Seattle springs surprise

Times News Services

If no one paid attention to Seattle Breakers during the last three weeks of the regular Western Hockey League season, that's being changed today.

As the final qualifiers for the Western Division's double round-robin semi-final, the Breakers finished well behind Victoria Cougars and Portland Winter Hawks.

Even after the Breakers won 11 of their last 14 starts, Seattle still was being considered the underdog participant in the first playoff round.

But not now.

Backed by goaltender Ken Hodge's sparkling performance, the Monty Miron-coached Breakers carried their momentum into the playoffs by upsetting the Winter Hawks 4-2 Wednesday in Portland.

Hodge stopped 43 shots, including 23 in the final period. Spotting Portland the first goal, Breakers scored three straight goals in the second and led 3-2 starting the third. Brian Graves' breakaway goal at 17:03 put the lid on the surprise result.

Portland travels to Seattle Friday for the next game, then visits Victoria's Memorial Arena on Saturday.

Brandon Wheat Kings, Billings Bighorns and Regina Pats were Wednesday's winners in the Eastern Division.

At Calgary, Brandon evened its best-of-seven quarter-final series against the Wranglers at 1-1 with an 8-6 victory.

Brandon used its superior size to muscle the Wranglers off the puck and force them to make mistakes despite Calgary's large territorial advantage.

Brandon was assessed 11 of 13 minor penalties. That helped Calgary enjoy a 41-26 edge in shots-on-goal but the netminding of Ron Popplestone and Scott Olson enabled the Wheat Kings to weather the storm.

At Medicine Hat, Neal Girard's spectacular 46-save goaltending led Billings to a 4-1 win over the Tigers in the first game of their series.

In Regina, the Pats scored nine unanswered goals in the second and third periods to whip Lethbridge Broncos 9-2 and take a 2-0 lead in their best-of-seven quarter-final series.

Doug Wickenheiser, Mike Blaisdell and Jim McGeough each had two goals for the Pats, who outshot Lethbridge 56-25.

Squeaker over U.S. keeps Folk on top

MONCTON, N.B. (CP) — For six ends, Paul Pustovar and his United States rink made few mistakes against Canada in the sixth round of the men's world curling championship Wednesday night.

The U.S. foursome from Hibbing, Minn., had a 3-1 lead entering the seventh end, and Rick Folk appeared to be headed for his first defeat.

It turned around quickly.

Folk tied the score with two points in the seventh end, gave up a point to the U.S. in the eighth, then scored once in the 10th to force an extra end with the game deadlocked at 4-4.

With the last rock against him, Folk came around a guard with a brilliant draw shot to lie one at the back of the four-foot circle. Pustovar attempted to follow the same path but was a shade heavy and the Saskatoon rink won 5-4.

"It was the toughest game we've had so far," said Folk, who leads the round-robin portion of the 10-country tournament with a 6-0 record. "They actually outcurled us but we got a couple of good breaks in the late ends to beat them.

"But they're a good team and I hope they bounce back. It was a big win for us. It was a pressure game, probably more so on them than us. It's too bad somebody had to lose it."

Pustovar said he thought his final stone in the 11th end caught something on the ice but another member of his rink said it was just too heavy.

"It went about a foot past the Canadian shot rock," said John Jankila, third for the U.S. team. "I thought it was going to pull up there at the end but it just stayed out there a little farther.

"We took the same broom, or maybe a little bit less than Rick had. It's a disappointing loss because I think we outcurled them as a team.

"We had the upper hand most of the game. They didn't have us in trouble at all. We had them in trouble a couple of times and Rick came through.

"We didn't make many mistakes . . . but we made one too many."

In another sixth-round game for the Air Canada Silver Broom trophy, Jurg Tanner returned to action after resting his sore left hip in the fifth draw and directed Switzerland to a 6-5 win over defending-champion Kristian Soerum of Norway.

The setback knocked Soerum, who dropped his opening-round game 7-2 to Canada, into a four-way tie for second place with Switzerland, Sweden's Ragnar Kamp and Franz Engler of West Germany.

The Americans and Italy's Giuseppe Dal Molin were both at 3-3, with Jorn Blach of Denmark and Barton Henderson of Scotland at 1-5. Henri Muller of France had a 0-6 record.

In other sixth-round games before more than 5,000 fans, Sweden whipped Scotland 12-5, West Germany bounced Italy 12-2 and Denmark beat France, 8-4.

Ron Low pays his respects

By The Canadian Press

Detroit Red Wings had no use for Ron Low nine months ago. Wednesday night, right in Detroit, Low returned the slap in the face.

Showing up as the opposing goaltender in the colors of Edmonton Oilers, the former Wing kicked out 49 of 51 Detroit shots as the Oilers won one of the most important games for either team this season, 5-2.

National Hockey League playoffs begin April 8 and Low's dazzling performance gave the Oilers a much-needed boost, while seriously damaging the Red Wings' chances of qualifying.

Another new Oiler, Don Murdoch, scored two goals. Low and Murdoch are making general manager Larry Gordon look like a genius. Both players were acquired two weeks ago on the last day NHL trades were allowed.

In other games, Washington Capitals continued to make headway towards a playoff spot by defeating St. Louis Blues 4-2, Chicago Black Hawks handed Quebec Nordiques a crippling 7-2 setback and Winnipeg Jets blasted the faltering Hartford Whalers 7-0.

Low, 29, is playing for his fifth NHL team since breaking into the league seven years ago. He was a Red Wing until last June, when Detroit allowed Quebec to claim the netminder in the expansion draft.

Low's emergence as a key element in the Oilers' struggle for a playoff spot was never more obvious than during Wednesday's game. The Red Wings outshot the Oilers 51-20, including a 24-5 edge in the first period, and had their power-play unit on the ice for five of the six penalties called in the game.

Murdoch's two goals included his 100th career goal. Wayne Gretzky drew two assists to increase his points total to 127, four shy of leading Marcel Dionne.

Edmonton's victory was all the more important since it opened a three-point spread on the Red Wings, who have two games in hand on the Oilers.

In Landover, Md., 16,156 spectators went wild when Washington's leading scorer, rookie Mike Gartner, netted his 35th goal of the season and Rolf Edberg contributed his 21st in a 6½-minute stretch early in the third period to lift the Capitals over St. Louis.

The Nordiques needed a home triumph to kick off a gruelling 11-day, eight-game series that will make or break their season — but they came up empty against a balanced Chicago attack.

Dave Christian, a member of the U.S. Olympic gold-medal championship team, had his biggest night in the NHL with three goals and Markus Mattsson recorded the Winnipeg shutout as Whalers went without victory for a sixth straight game.

COA has money to get to Moscow

MONTREAL (CP) — Dick Pound, past president of the Canadian Olympic Association, said Wednesday that the COA has enough money to send a team to the 1980 Summer Games at Moscow even without federal government help.

Pound, a Montreal lawyer who is one of two Canadian members of the International Olympic Committee, said the association has $3 million. Wally Halder of Toronto, president of the Olympic Trust Fund of Canada, said the budget for the Moscow Games is $1.67 million and only $400,000 of that would be expected to come from Ottawa.

"We have enough money of our own to go to Moscow," Pound said in a speech to the Advertising and Sales Executive Club of Montreal.

Pound said he has "wavered from side to side" on the issue of whether Canada should support the Olympic boycott proposed by United States President Jimmy Carter in light of the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan.

Pound said he has asked for a meeting with Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau and appropriate ministers to discuss the matter. The COA board of directors will meet at Olympic House here this weekend.

Strike talks near 'if' and 'when' stage

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — The meeting that will determine if and when major league baseball players will go on strike is less than a week away, yet club owners and players remain miles apart on a new four-year agreement.

"I'm not optimistic until I see a reason to be," said Marvin Miller, the director of the Players Association, after negotiations between owners and players reopened Wednesday. Miller said no movement was made on any of several key issues during the session, which lasted just under two hours.

"The owners are not seeking a strike," said Ray Grebey, chief owners' negotiator. "But at the same time, they feel very strongly about their proposals.

"We've had very constructive negotiations so far," he added.

The two sides planned to meet again today and Friday.

Miller is also meeting this week with members of several teams to outline what is going on in the talks and to discuss the possibility of a strike. He met Wednesday with 40 members of San Francisco Giants and 22 players from Cleveland Indians, who voted unanimously to authorize a strike if no agreement is reached by April 1. Of the nearly 800 players to vote thus far only one, on Kansas City Royals, has voted against strike authorization.

Barring a major breakthrough soon, "it's been pretty much decided we'll have to take some sort of strike action. The question is when," said Gary Lavelle, the Giants' player representative.

"We're so far apart that everything is questionable," said Indians' player representative Wayne Garland.

"The meetings have been pretty much at a standstill," said San Diego pitcher Randy Jones, who attended Wednesday's negotiations.

Player representatives from all the major league teams plan to meet with Miller in Dallas on April 1 to decide whether to strike, if an agreement is not reached by then.

The talks apparently are deadlocked over several issues, the most important involving the free agent system.

The owners want a modification in the system that would increase the compensation a team could get after losing a highly-sought free agent.

For example, Grebey noted, when Pete Rose was signed as a free agent by Philadelphia, Cincinnati Reds in return "got a young gentleman (whose) chance of moving from the rookie league to the majog leagues is one in 10." The owners believe the Reds deserved more than that, Grebey said, and are proposing that a team losing a highly-regarded free agent should be allowed to select a player from the roster of the agent's new team.

The free agent's new team would be permitted to protect 15 players from that selection process, but players believe that few teams would be willing to sign a free agent if they could end up losing their 16th best player.

Among other items remain on the bargaining table, including whether players should receive a piece of baseball's television revenues and whether a player of four years service or less should be restricted to a one-year contract.

Leading Cougars honored

Rookie goaltender Grant Fuhr capped a brilliant debut in the Western Hockey League by walking away with three trophies from Victoria Cougars' annual awards dinner Wednesday.

The 17-year-old from Spruce Grove, Alta., beaten out teammate Kevin Eastman as the leading netminder in the league, was selected the club's rookie-of-the-year, the most popular player and the most valuable.

Fuhr won 30 of 43 decisions.

Centre Barry Pederson, 18, won the leading scorer's trophy after producing 140 points and also was voted the player combining sportsmanship with ability.

Captain Mark Robinson was another double winner, emerging as the highest-scoring defenceman and also voted the top rearguard.

Winger Brad Palmer, after compiling 45 goals and 94 points in his second season, was voted the most improved and winger Bob Smith was named the most inspirational player.

The most popular player was chosen by fans while the inspirational award was decided by the players.

Some white heat for Expos

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (CP) — Even before the spring training camp of the National League's Montreal Expos opened, the accolades had begun to flow in for pitcher Bob James.

"He reminds me of a young Rich Gossage," said Expos manager Dick Williams, referring to the ace reliever of New York Yankees of baseball's American League. "James throws the same kind of heat that Gossage does, and I think he's going to be a great one."

The comment reached James at his home in Sunland, Calif., as he worked feverishly to rid himself of 25 excess pounds that he had carried into training camp last year.

"It's flattering to be mentioned even in the same sentence as a guy like Gossage," said James after completing his exercises at City Island Park. "I just hope I can live up to it."

The 21-year-old James was one of the last pitchers cut by the Expos last spring. In fact, it came down to a choice between James and his room-mate, David Palmer. The club retained Palmer, and James went to the team's Class AAA affiliate, Denver Bears of the American Association. He posted an 8-13 record and a 6.68 earned-run average, largely in a park that is tailor-made for hitters.

"I didn't have to worry about batters hitting home runs off me because I just put them on base," said James in reference to the 123 walks he yielded in 132 innings.

Control has always been one of James's biggest drawbacks, and he has been working overtime in camp to correct the deficiency.

"Basically, I've been cutting down on my windup and not trying to throw the ball so hard, and it appears to be working out for me," he said.

Compensating for James's wildness, however, is his ability to fire fastballs at an overpowering speed. The rangy right-hander has struck out 384 batters in 392 innings of minor league ball.

James said his blazing speed has come naturally.

"You can't teach a guy to throw hard. You can teach him how to get it over the plate and how to throw a curveball, but the fastball was God's gift to me. I've just been blessed with a good arm and took advantage of it when I was very young."

Although he is the first to admit that overcoming his wildness is a priority, James added that his lack of control could also be something of an asset.

"You look at Nolan Ryan. He's still wild as heck, yet he seems to throw his no-hitter a year. Any pitcher that throws a certain amount of terror into the batter has an advantage. If a pitcher lets go of the ball and even he doesn't know where it's going, no batter's going to dig in on you. If a guy throws hard besides that, it just magnifies the situation threefold I would think."

After failing to make the roster last spring, James said, he prepared for the 1980 training camp by going on a low-carbohydrate diet, running a few miles a day and trying to keep from getting lazy as he did a year ago.

IOC shows interest in return to Greece

ATHENS (Reuter) — The International Olympic Committee has appointed a special committee to study a proposal for the permanent return of the Olympic Games to Greece — their ancient birthplace.

A government announcement Wednesday said IOC president Lord Killanin had informed Greek premier Constantine Karamanlis his proposal that the Olympics should be held in Olympia in Western Peloponnese had been received with great interest by IOC members.

"Lord Killanin informed the Greek premier that a special committee was set up to study the proposal and submit its decision to the executive council of the IOC," the announcement said.

Submitting his proposal to Killanin last month, Karamanlis said that recent developments had jeopardized the future of the Games.

Prince Philip to pass Games

LONDON (AP) — Prince Philip will not attend the Summer Olympic Games in Moscow, government sources said Wednesday.

There had been speculation that Prince Philip would go in his capacity of president of the International Equestrian Federation. Equestrian events are part of the Olympics.

But since Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government has taken a strong stand against holding the Olympics in Moscow, due to Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, there is no question of Prince Philip going to Moscow, the sources said. The royal family traditionally accedes to desires of the government.

Although the British Olympic Association decided Tuesday that a British team would go to Moscow, the government has said it would not have an official representative there. Along with the United States and some other countries, Britain favors alternative games for athletes boycotting Moscow.

Meanwhile, British Olympic Appeal organizers urged members of the public to donate money to help send the British team to the Moscow Games.

The British Olympic Association is $880,000 short of the $2.2 million needed to send a full team to the Games.

Attendance mark reported by NFL

NEW YORK (AP) — National Football League attendance reached a record 13,182,039 in 1979 and the per-game average of 58,848 was the second highest in history, the league has reported.

Paid attendance passed 13 million for the first time and was 410,239 above the total of 12,771,800 in 1978, when the schedule was increased to its present 224 regular-season games.

Robert Noble: in a demanding sport

Canada's pentathletes languish in backwash

Victoria's Robert Noble bids for place on team

OTTAWA (CP) — Not only is modern pentathlon the least known of Olympic sports among Canadians, it also hasn't convinced Sport Canada it should get the same financial backing as other sports.

Combining swimming, cross-country running, horse jumping, pistol shooting and fencing, pentathlon is well supported in Europe, the Soviet Union and the U.S. but languishes almost in obscurity here.

The six men rated best prospects for the 1980 Olympic team pay for all their training — mainly in the U.S. which has the facilities and climate, says John Norton, technical chairman for the pentathlon association.

Norton, a transport department official who looks after the sport in his spare time, doesn't know yet whether the Canadian Olympic Association will back a full four-man pentathlon team for the Summer Olympics in Moscow.

"We will have to argue for a full team."

He has to hope his athletes do well enough in several U.S competitions this spring, as well as in the Canadian championships in Sarnia May 17-19, to convince the COA to back a team.

Jack Lynch, COA technical director, has told Norton he wants improved performances by the athletes. A decision on the Olympics will be made after the championships.

Norton said two athletes will likely qualify — Jack Alexander of Sarnia and Barry Kennedy of Edmonton. But whether Robert Noble of Victoria, Dacre Stocker and Anthony Pompeo both of Montreal, or Jim Stockley of Sarnia, qualify for the other two berths depends on the their performances and the COA.

The basic COA qualification standard is whether an athlete has a reasonable prospect of finishing in the top 16 at Moscow.

One of Canada's most promising pentathletes — Alain Williams of Montreal — has not kept up his training and appears to be too far out of condition to rate as a prospect for Montreal, Norton said.

Alexander finished second in a recent competition in the U.S. against some of the top U.S. pentathletes. The U.S. has the defending world individual and team champions. Two other Canadians finished 10th and 11th.

Norton said the first thing the association looks for when recruiting pentathletes is a good swimmer because the other disciplines can be learned. Another source of pentathletes is the Pony Club which trains young horse riders.

Norton said that for a good athlete, cross-country running is a matter of conditioning, pistol shooting "is a mind sport and fencing can be learned in time."

The main thing for the athletes to accept is that it will take several years of training and competition to become proficient in the sport.

Some now train at U.S. military colleges in Houston and San Antonio, Texas, but Norton is concerned that that hospitality may end some day and the sport has no home in Canada.

The first national modern pentathlon championship was held near Montreal in 1973. There has been a national championship ever year since and U.S. athletes are usually invited to help round out the field.

Norton said the association hopes there will be women's pentathlon competition in the 1984 Olympics at Los Angeles. There are several promising female pentathletes in Canada who have done well in U.S. competitions, he said.

Troubled times ahead for eight teams

LONDON (AP) — With Liverpool's stranglehold on the English First Division title being strengthened every week, soccer interest now centres on the race to win promotion from Second Division.

Eight teams are still unsure of where they'll play next year, promotion race seems certain to go to the last Saturday of the season.

Chelsea, the current Second Division leader, has not played well for a number of weeks. Colin Viljoen, a signing from Manchester City, has added stability to midfield, but Chelsea's youthful team appears lacking in quality players.

Of the chasing bunch, experienced Birmingham and John Lyall's intelligent West Ham team look the best bets to return to the First Division. But both have been dropping points with alarming regularity.

Chelsea meets Charlton, seemingly doomed to relegation. Charlton sacked manager Andy Nelson this week and Geoff Hurst's young Chelsea team should pick up both points.

Birmingham, inspired by veteran Scottish international midfielder Archie Gemmill, is at home to struggling Watford, while Leicester entertains Preston.

Birmingham and Leicester should both win comfortably, as should Luton — at home to Burnley — and Newcastle — at home to Bristol Rovers.

Queen's Park Rangers — away to Shrewsbury — and Cup semi-finalists West Ham — away to Swansea — have the toughest matches.

In the First Division, Liverpool returns to White Hart Lane, where it defeated Tottenham 1-0 in a recent Cup quarter-final.

European champion Nottingham Forest is away to Brighton, which has moved clear of the relegation zone.

Last-place Bolton and Manchester City, fourth from the bottom, meet in a Lancashire derby at Maine Road and defeat could end Malcolm Allison's reign.

Craven to remain with Whitecaps

VANCOUVER (CP) — Veteran defender John Craven signed a one-year contract Wednesday with Vancouver Whitecaps, ending speculation he would be traded to another North American Soccer League team.

Craven, the top defender during the playoffs last season when Vancouver captured the Soccer Bowl title, encountered contractual problems with the front office during the off-season. At one stage, he was traded to Minnesota Kicks, but declined to move because of a clause in his contract.

The Whitecaps also announced that team manager Tony Waiters has been named general manager of the franchise. Waiters was coach of the team last season.

Bob McNab, an assistant under Waiters in 1979, was named head coach during the winter. Waiters will assume all duties relating to handling of players under his new terms of reference.

Vancouver opens defence of its title here Saturday night against California Surf.

McNeil the villain in Rocket's attack

TORONTO (CP) — Rocket Richard has laid to rest the real culprit behind his celebrated assault on Hugh McLean, a National Hockey League referee, in a New York hotel lobby some 25 years ago.

The Rocket, whose firebrand hockey achievements with Montreal were often overshadowed by a deserved reputation for getting into trouble, agreed with referee Red Storey that Gerry McNeil, a mild-mannered Canadiens goaltender of that era, was to blame for that incident.

The Hockey Hall of Famer was fined $500 by Clarence Campbell, then president of the National Hockey League, for conduct prejudicial to the sport.

Storey, who made it to the hall of fame as an official, said following a Toronto-Montreal old timers game at Maple Leaf Gardens the most explosive scorer in NHL history got undeserved bad press from the McLean incident in which Richard grabbed the official by the throat.

McNeil and Richard were leaving the hotel to attend Mass when they spotted McLean in the lobby. McLean had refereed a game the previous night in Montreal where Richard had served 20 minutes in penalties and paid a $75 fine.

"Referees were not supposed to stay at the same hotel as the teams,"Richard was recalliing, "so I was surprised to see McLean there. . . . Everybody knew we stayed at that hotel."

Bill Friday, another long-time referee in the NHL who officiated Sunday's game along with Storey and Richard, attempted to interject some support for McLean.

"We had to stay where we could get a rate," Friday complained. "Our living allowance was only $10 a day. If you had to take a cab from the airport, you didn't have much left."

Richard said nothing would have happened, except, when the players got outside, McNeil "asked me if I heard what McLean said about me when we passed."

"I didn't know he was kidding. So I ran right back in and grabbed McLean. Asked him what he said about me."

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Utah Jazz has placed its top scorer, Adrian Dantley, suffering from a back strain, on the National Basketball Association injured list.

Three's the limit; Budd knew rules

NEW YORK (CP) — The rules of the ABC-TV World Superstars competition bar contestants from competing after three wins, a network spokesman said Wednesday.

The spokesman was reacting to Canadian soccer player Brian Budd's allegations the network was looking for a loophole to bar him from future competitions because he had won three times.

"There has always been a limit to how many times you can win," the spokesman said.

Soccer player Kyle Rote won the championship three times and could not enter again. American speedskater Ann Henning won the women's competition three times and was likewise barred from a shot at a fourth title.

The network said Budd should have been aware of the limitation.

Budd, who plays for Toronto Blizzard of the North American Soccer League, won his third consecutive Superstars competition last week.

Ticats stadium gets new turf

HAMILTON, Ont. (CP) — Hamilton city council has decided to spend $598,000 to install new artificial turf at Ivor Wynne Stadium, home of the Canadian Football League Hamilton Tiger-Cats.

The city has estimated revenue at the stadium this year to be about $257,000, of which $220,000 comes from the Tiger-Cats.

Gains tops Cuckoos

Mike Gains led the way Wednesday as Cuckoo Clock came up with a 98-93 victory over Henderson Realty at Central Junior High School to force a third and deciding game in the best-of-three Victoria Senior "B" Men's Basketball League playoff final.

Gains fired 28 points while Dave Mulcahy added 22, Gary Budd chipped in 19 and Wayne Andrews contributed 17.

Jim Duddridge scored 22 points for Henderson, which trailed 52-47 at half time, while Rob Parris and Quinn Groenhyde added 20 each and Chris Trumpy 19.

The date of the deciding game won't be announced until after the weekend. Henderson, Cuckoo Clock and DataTech, another league team, will be competing in the provincial championship at Kamloops.

Surprise triumph brings trip

Giant-killing Allenby-Ford Khalsa of Duncan has been selected to represent British Columbia in the Western Canada Games at Edmonton, starting April 12, after shocking its way to the title in the provincial men's senior "A" volleyball tournament.

It was such a shock because only a month ago the little-known Duncan squad had won the B.C. senior "B" crown and was invited "to try to do its best" against the senior "A" teams.

The Duncan squad responded by flattening all opponents at Mission, winning all its best-of-three tournament contests in two straight games. When it surprised everyone by reaching the final, Duncan still had two lives left and its opponent, the highly-favored Vancouver Titans, clung to one life after losing once to Khalsa and being forced to deciding games five times by other sides.

Duncan won the final, 2-0.

Titans will go with the Duncan squad to the Western Canada Games. Victoria Farwest Hammers were third at Mission.

Sandown facelift backed by CRB

A proposal to upgrade facilities at Sandown Park has passed another hurdle.

Capital Region Board members voted Wednesday to approve an application by Orangeville Raceway, acting for Goodwood Park Limited and Colwood Park Association, to remove the Sidney land from the agricultural land reserve.

Under the proposal, as revealed in the Times, Saturday, existing facilities will be demolished and replaced with permanent buildings, including a 900-seat grandstand and a two-story clubhouse with 200 seats on the upper floor and 250 seats in the ground-floor lounge.

Suspension lifted

GLASGOW (Reuter) — Scottish track officials have lifted a suspension they imposed on Bill Walker, the British coach at the centre of a storm over alleged illegal payments at a track and field meet in Edinburgh.

Walker was banned indefinitely by the Scottish AAA's general committee last month because they alleged he admitted making illegal expenses to athletes in the 1978 Highland Games, which he organized.

New chief moves fast to start police reforms

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Significant changes in the internal structure of the Victoria police department and more emphasis on crime prevention will be implemented this year if the police board approves hiring 10 more constables and two civilians, Chief William Snowdon said Wednesday.

On the job only seven weeks, Snowdon said he had to outline proposed reforms now because the board is reviewing the department's 1980 budget next week and it takes many months to recruit and train new constables.

It was the first substantial indication of the directions the new chief plans for the police.

He called a press conference on short notice Wednesday morning to make public a proposal he gave the police board on Tuesday at its first budget session.

Snowdon seems to be trying to generate public support for an increase in the department's budget to hire the extra constables. The proposal has raised eyebrows at city hall, where council is busy slashing spending estimates in other city departments directly under council supervision.

Initial response was positive

Victoria police are accountable to a civilian board chaired by Mayor Bill Tindall, which oversees the department's operations and vets its budget. The members (former alderman Alf Hood, Phil Fawcett and John Gordon) were initially positive when he presented his manpower report, the chief said.

Snowdon's budget is still subject to council approval, but the police board will make the decision on manpower. Aldermen may only veto or approve the total, not tinker with individual items.

Snowdown noted that the last increase in manpower was in 1976 when nine more constables were authorized. Since then, available manpower has been eroded by greater annual leave and more liberal allowances for court appearances, overtime and statutory holidays.

"All of these factors have led to less available manpower for responding to the needs of the community."

The cost of enlarging the force would be $134,000 this year (which covers only August to December) but more than double that amount the next year.

Eight new constables would be added to the four existing 19-member platoons, allowing one new constable on patrol and adding a new position of platoon leader.

The remaining two would go to the community services section for school work and crime prevention, increasing its strength by 50 per cent.

This would free senior members of the department for reassignment to two new sections, staff development and training and long-term planning and research, each composed of a staff-sergeant, constable and one civilian clerical employee.

Snowdon said staff development is his top priority. All the commissioned officers on the force — himself, deputy chief Jim Smith and the seven inspectors — are within 12 years of mandatory retirement, and probably some will take early retirement at 55, he said.

Candidates for the inspector positions are now non-commissioned officers on the force and the department must start immediately to identify those with the potential for promotion.

The new section will also be responsible for screening new recruits. The department now hires about one in 50 applicants, Snowdon said.

It will also identify and organize training programs for the police and check on outside courses at UVic and Camosun College which could be used to broaden police skills and knowledge.

The other new section, long-term planning and research, Snowdon described as critical.

"We have to do some long-term planning. We're not doing it now."

Snowdon was candid in discussing crime prevention. Victoria's call-load is high — about a third greater than Vancouver's — because the police answer every call, even minor complaints such as car aerials being snapped off.

But the police are not very effective in areas like this, he conceded. They usually don't catch the culprit.

Dislike domestic dispute calls

Police officers also dislike handling domestic disputes, where likewise they are not too effective in solving the basic problem.

"They'd rather be in on a B and E (break and enter) in progress where all the action is."

But the solution isn't dropping calls to such incidents. For domestic disputes, Snowdon said in some cities social workers are on the police payroll. In North Vancouver, members of the so-called God Squad ride around with police to help them deal with family arguments. There is funding available from senior govrnments for programs like these, he said.

Minor crimes like vandalism can be dealt with better on a prevention footing.

Asked if he would set a priority for women in the 10 new positions, Snowdon said he wanted the best candidates regardless of sex.

Rupert port squelch from Pepin

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — Less than 24 hours after reconfirming a $47-million commitment for expansion of Roberts Bank, federal Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin had less heartening news for the Port of Prince Rupert.

During a two-hour visit Tuesday, Pepin said his government is not committed to the $43-million scheme proposed by the former Progressive Conseravtive government for development of a superport on nearby Ridley Island.

He said the Liberal government wants to see Ridley Island developed but indicated he would prefer a scheme which would allow his government to recover development costs rather than providing an outright grant, as had been the Tory proposal.

Along with funds from the B.C. and Alberta governments, the $43 million grant unde former finance minister Don Mazankowski would have been enough for a major grain terminal, a coal terminal and a number of smaller industries. The $43 million was seen as the government's share of the over-all $244-million cost of Ridley Island development.

Before the judge

A 24-year-old parolee from Calgary was sentenced to a total of three years in jail after pleading guilty in provincial court Wednesday to a series of Victoria and Calgary charges.

Robert Scullion admitted having restricted and prohibited weapons and stolen credit cards in Victoria on Feb. 4, and failing to remain at the scene of an accident and resisting a peace officer in Calgary on Jan. 15.

Crown counsel Don Laughton told Judge Lorne Pearce that Scullion, his common-law wife, and another man were stopped in a vehicle on a routine check by Saanich police at Harriet and Gorge shortly after 1 p.m. Feb. 4.

Police found an attache case in the trunk which contained a 22-calibre pistol loaded with six bullets.

Officers also found a switchblade knife, which Scullion said he dropped on the ground as the vehicle was being stopped, and 26 stolen Gulf credit cards taken in a Jan. 20 break-in in downtown Calgary.

In connection with the Calgary charges, Laughton said Scullion was involved in two accidents and drove away from both. Calgary police found Scullion at his home trying to pull a rear fender away from a tire.

Court was told Scullion was extremely unco-operative with officers, refused to fill out an accident report and became upset when a tow truck was called to haul his vehicle away. Two civilians had to help police handcuff Scullion after he fought with officers.

Scullion has a criminal record dating back to June of 1973 when he was 17. It includes convictions for uttering forged documents, theft, assault, causing a disturbance, possession of a prohibited weapon, failing to attend court, breaking and entering, possession of housebreaking instruments, escaping lawful custody, and assaulting a peace officer.

Defence lawyer Brian MacKenzie said Scullion had been released on mandatory supervision since last August and was only "hanging on" to the items found in his possession Feb. 4 out of loyalty to a jailed friend.

MacKenzie said Scullion only used the credit cards three times on his trip to B.C., once in Kamloops and twice in Vancouver. He also said Scullion did not load the pistol but received it already loaded.

The judge said Scullion displayed a "complete contempt and disregard" for the future of his common-law wife, who was in the courtroom.

A 26-year-old man who snatched pills from a Sidney pharmacist's hands Jan. 14 received a three-month jail term.

Peter Vandermeer, of 63 Spectacle Lake Trailer Court, pleaded guilty to theft under $200 after being denied bail in a morning hearing.

Court was told Vandermeer grabbed the drugs after his cheque was refused by the pharmacist.

Laughton also noted that Vandermeer was on two sets of bail and two sets of probation at the time.

Pearce also placed Vandermeer on a year's probation and ordered him to attend drug counselling as directed.

An 18-year-old described by defence lawyer Barry Browning as a good Grade 12 student was given two months in jail after he pleaded guilty to three counts of driving while under suspension.

Anthony Lloyd Barker, 477 Lampson, was given two consecutive terms of 14 days each and one consecutive sentence of one month.

Court was told the initial incident took place in the 500-block Pembroke on Jan. 14 when he identified himself to Victoria police as his brother, Richard Byron Barker. Four days later Barker was caught speeding at Government and Bay, and again gave police his brother's name.

The final occasion was Monday at 11:35 a.m. when Barker's vehicle was involved in an accident at Courtney and Gordon streets. This time, Laughton said, Barker admitted his real identity.

Laughton said Barker had been suspended because of the accumulation of penalty driving points.

Browning said his client gave his brother's name because he was at the limit on penalty points.

Judge Pearce said the youth was a young, intelligent person with everything going for him, but said he made deliberate attempts to evade responsibility, which showed a disregard for the law.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Robert Wayne Swanson, 20, of 647 Fairway, $450; Virgilio Lima, 24, of 2220 Quadra, $450; Edward William Heeb, 30, of 302 Superior, $200; and Colleen Michelle Adrian, 18, of 620 Quadra, $50.

In addition, Adrian was placed on a year's probation and ordered not to apply for a driver's licence during that period.

Mountie kicked man, city constables testify

Two city police constables testified in county court Wednesday they saw Constable Grant Bottrell of the RCMP kick 23-year-old David Dean Krenbrink in the early hours of May 1 outside the Sidney detachment.

Constable Teresa Gardner said Bottrell kicked Krenbrink twice in the head and twice in the chest and Constable Keith Terlson said Bottrell kicked Krenbrink in the left chest and the side of his face.

They were testifying at the second day of the trial of Bottrell who is accused of two counts of assault causing bodily harm to Krenbrink, one by striking him with a nightstick and one by kicking him.

The Crown closed its case after calling seven witnesses. The jury trial was to continue today.

Terlson was on duty with Gardner checking out a report of a stolen motorcycle. The parts reported stolen were later found to be not similar to parts from Krenbrink's truck.

During the early morning, they met Bottrell and his partner, Constable Joseph Choquette, at the weigh scales on the Patricia Bay Highway and they all went to the Sidney detachment.

When they arrived, Terlson said Choquette was trying to open the rear door of the RCMP vehicle but was having difficulty because Krenbrink had his hand on the lock. Bottrell came to assist and Terlson said he tossed his billy club to Bottrell and suggested he wrap Krenbrink's knuckles.

Bottrell got into the car, yelled something through the plastic screen and poked the stick at Krenbrink's fingers and he stopped holding the lock.

Bottrell then opened the car door and stood back a step. Krenbrink got out, and as he was about to stand up, he stood up very quickly and raised one arm which was in a cast. At the same time Bottrell pushed him against the car.

Terlson said the billy club landed on Krenbrink's glasses which came off and the man fell on to the back of the car and then to the parking lot. This was when the kicking occurred and Choquette grabbed Bottrell.

Terlson said he could not tell if Krenbrink struck his head on a curb. He said Krenbrink's arm was not swung at Bottrell.

Bottrell, he said, appeared upset before getting Krenbrink out of the car and "I would say he lost control when he kicked Krenbrink."

He said "yes" when asked if Krenbrink's arm with the cast on was moving towards Bottrell's head. He believed the cut to Krenbrink's forehead was caused by the club.

Gardner also said the RCMP were having trouble getting Krenbrink out of the car because he was holding the lock down so Terlson gave his billy club to Bottrell with the suggestion he rap the man's knuckles.

When the door was opened, Krenbrink came out and had his right arm in front of his head. Bottrell struck at Krenbrink and hit him on the forehead.

Krenbrink fell on his left side and the kicking occurred, she said.

She could not recall Krenbrink making any aggressive motion while on the ground and was covering his face with his hands.

Asked if Krenbrink swung at Bottrell as he got out of the car, she said: "Not a deliberate swing."

Constable Choquette said Krenbrink got out of the police car quite suddenly and his right hand, which was in a cast, was up in the air above his shoulder. Bottrell grabbed Krenbrink by the throat and pushed his hand which contained the club against his forehead.

Choquette said he did not see Krenbrink swing his arm and there had been no threats by Krenbrink but there had been insults.

Krenbrink then fell and he couldn't see him because of an open car door.

By raising himself, Choquette said he saw Krenbrink had his head on a concrete curb. Bottrell was quite excited and mad and he told him to cool off.

From his position, Choquette said, he was not able to see any kicking.

Asked if Krenbrink's fist was up in the air in a fighting position, he said: "It could be, I can't say for sure."

John Wolski, 24, a friend of Krenbrink's who drove with him to Durrance Lake to visit some girls, said they ended up at the wrong place and someone called police.

He said both men put their hands on the locks of the RCMP vehicle driven by Bottrell to Sidney until the other police cars arrived. Bottrell grabbed a billy stick and tried to get Krenbrink's fingers off the lock and both men took their hands away.

As Krenbrink was getting out of the car, in a crouched position with one foot out, Bottrell grabbed him and smacked him on the head with the club. When Krenbrink first was hit, he put his arm up and then he was poked in the eye and he landed on the ground, said Wolski.

He said Krenbrink was kicked frequently — he couldn't count how many times — while on the ground and was covering his head with his arms.

Wolski said Krenbrink didn't make any aggressive motion at Bottrell.

He said Choquette didn't try to open the car door and he was quite certain there was a total of five policemen. He also said Bottrell had the club in his hand when he got out of the car and didn't get it from someone else.

Wolski denied that Krenbrink attacked Bottrell and then fell to the curb.

Krenbrink, cross-examined by defence counsel Gordon Macdonald, said he likes police and isn't rude and belligerent to them. He said the Bounty Hunters is a motorcycle club and not a gang and said it isn't modelled after the Hell's Angels.

He said he had misinterpreted Durrance Lake and Prospect Lake and the girl he wanted lived at Prospect but he and Wolski had ended up at Durrance.

Krenbrink said he had apologized to Constable Gardner for what he called a flippant remark but she testified there has been no apology.

He said he had barely got out of the police car when he was struck again and again by Bottrell, and on the ground he was being choked.

He denied telling a nurse in Saanich Peninsula Hospital he had fallen on a concrete slab.

Krenbrink said he told two or three deputy sheriffs when he came to the courthouse that Bottrell had beaten him up. Asked if he told one deputy sheriff that he had fallen, he said this was possible but he was being snide.

He denied coming out with his arm swinging at Bottrell, and denied he was going to attack.

When Macdonald suggested that Bottrell defended himself and Krenbrink fell and hit his head on the curb, he said: "No sir, I did not."

Ferry contract? Fraser in dark

Transportation Minister Alex Fraser Wednesday denied any knowledge of a secret contract issued by the B.C. Steamship Co. last fall for redesigning the Queen of Surrey so it could be used on the Victoria-Seattle run.

Under questioning by Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber, Fraser told the house repeatedly he knew nothing of the contract because he was not in charge of B.C. Steamship when it was issued.

"It goes back before my time," he said.

Fraser took over the responsibility from Industry Minister Don Phillips at the end of November.

Phillips, however, had no answers for the NDP about the Sept. 26 letter, signed by former B.C. Steamship president Arthur Elworthy, commissioning the design work.

The minister would not say whether he had encouraged Elworthy to believe he would get the Surrey as a replacement for the Princess Marguerite.

Phillips would only say: "I had a lot of negotiations and discussions with Mr. Elworthy."

Barber called that response evasive and ridiculous.

"Phillips is only adding to his own problems by behaving as he did in the house. He makes the government look very foolish."

Barber tabled documents in the house to show B.C. Steamship paid Marine Design Associates of Victoria $54,000 for two months of work on the new designs for the Surrey.

Those designs were never used. Instead the Surrey was committed to the Port Hardy-Prince Rupert run and the Queen of Prince Rupert was shifted to the Victoria-Seattle service.

Marine Design Associates is owned by Ian Smart, engineering consultant to the B.C. Steamship board of directors.

He is on record as threatening to sever his connection with the board unless the Marguerite was taken out of service.

The NDP is studying Smart's precise role in the situation, Barber said.

"Judging by Elworthy's letter, the design contract was never put out to tender. Until today it wasn't even public knowledge that the contract had been awarded."

Barber also questioned a notation on the Marine Design Associates account which indicated a markup of 220 per cent on work done.

"That sounds extraordinary," he said.

Heinrich eyes options to erase WCB deficit

Labor Minister Jack Heinrich is studying his options on how to deal with a $260 million deficit in the Workers Compensation Board fund.

He indicated Wednesday there are two alternatives — either increase employers' annual assessments or invest WCB funds more profitably.

"There could be a more aggressive investment policy of funds on hand. There is an awful lot of money in the WCB now and it may very well be we can invest some of it under current high interest rates," said Heinrich.

The minister's comments came after Employers Council of B.C. president Bill Hamilton proposed that the government pay part of the deficit.

Hamilton said the WCB is in the hole partially because of changes in legislation which affected the fund retroactively.

Therefore, he said, it would only be fair for the government to pay part of the cost.

"I have suggested the provincial government should contribute $50 million, with the balance coming from employers over a ten-year period."

Heinrich did not indicate when an answer to the WCB's financial dilemma will be forthcoming.

Chabot slaps feds for AHOP bail-out

Federal money to assist homeowners who this year must begin paying back loans they received five years ago under the Assisted Home Ownership Program is not enough, provincial Housing Minister Jim Chabot said Wednesday.

Paul Cosgrove, federal minister in charge of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp., announced Wednesday that about 2,000 homeowners will receive $300,000 in federal contributions to help meet their mortgage payments.

The current high interest rates are expected to cause hardship for many of those who received assistance under the AHOP program.

Chabot said the program is a media event and does not address itself to the the bigger problem of a Canada-wide housing shortage.

"Certainly it gives relief to a few homeowners, maybe a 150 in B.C., but we have thousands facing a very serious rollover of mortgages this year — in fact over 50,000," he said.

Chabot said the provincial government has not made any plans to add to the $300,000 being offered by Ottawa, but indicated he hopes to meet with Cosgrove to discuss the matter.

1917 accounting no good today

B.C.'s financial statues are obsolete and unsound, Auditor-General Erma Morrison told the legislature's public accounts committee Wednesday.

"What was good in 1917 isn't very good today," she said.

Mrs. Morrison was expanding on criticisms of government accounting procedures she detailed in her annual report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1979.

The government's accounting policies are "replete with anomalies and inconsistencies," she said in her report.

Its accounting procedures have been overtaken in recent years by a vast explosion in the number of government transactions and the amount of money involved, she told the committee.

And because the B.C. statutes are so out of date, the situation is worse than in other provinces, she added.

Jubilee medics don't want abortion load from VGH

Medical staff at Royal Jubilee Hospital have asked the RJH therapeutic abortion committee not to sit as the Victoria General Hospital's committee.

The move is an attempt to keep out of the abortion controversy at VGH.

Dr. Elinor Powell, chief of medical staff at RJH, told the hospital board Wednesday the medical staff Tuesday had passed a motion recommending its abortion committee not hear abortion application requests every second month at VGH.

The RJH board approved that recommendation.

If the RJH abortion committee follows through, it will mean all abortions will continue to be done at RJH.

The VGH board last week decided to ask the RJH committee to sit every second month as its committee.

THis would have had the effect of allowing abortions to be done every second month at VGH.

The controversy arose in January when the RJH board complained to the VGH board that it was being forced to perform all the abortion operations because the newly-appointed VGH committee was turning down almost all applications.

Powell said the medical staff made the most recent request because members don't want to be a party to what appears to be an attempt by the VGH board to circumvent its committee.

Medical committees generally are appointed by the hospital board on the recommendation of the medical staff as a whole.

Powell said the medical staff made the request to its abortion committee based on a poll taken several weeks ago among VGH medical staff.

The poll was taken before the VGH board came up with the idea of appointing the RJH abortion committee on a every-second-month basis last week.

At that time, Dr. Don Shorting, chief of medical staff at VGH, said he thought the medical staff would be willing to go along with that decision.

RJH director's duties shared

Dr. Kenneth Thornton and Dr. Ernest Higgs will share the duties of retired Royal Jubilee Hospital's medical director Dr. Ray LeHuquet for the next three months.

Dr. LeHuquet resigned earlier this year for health reasons.

Michael Butcher, executive director of the hospital, announced the appointments at a meeting Wednesday of the RJH board.

Butcher said the position will be evaluated at the end of the three-month period.

He said there is a possibility that a part-time medical director, who is also a member of the active medical staff at the hospital, might be desirable.

Previously the medical director's position was full-time.

Jubilee offers site for long-term care

Royal Jubilee Hospital will offer space on its grounds for a long-term care facility, board chairman Eric Simmons said at a board meeting Wednesday.

He said the offer will be made to the Capital Regional District's health and hospital commission but he stressed it is only a plan and not yet a definite proposal.

He said the offer will be made because the board recognizes the region and the government would appreciate an offer of land.

Murray Halkett, hospital planner for the CRD, said the possiblity of using RJH land will be seriously considered in a proposal for long-term care facilities in the region to be presented to the commission in about a month.

Halkett said there's money available from when Memorial Pavilion, the old Veterans' Hospital, was transferred from the federal government to RJH.

Simmons said any long-term care proposal for RJH is probably three to five years away.

Victoria, Saanich may block crematorium at Hatley

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Victoria and Saanich may seek an injunction to stop construction of a crematorium at Hatley Gardens cemetery in Colwood because it would compete with the municipally-owned unit at Royal Oak Burial Park.

Mayor Mel Couvelier said he has asked Saanich staff to prepare a report on the various options the municipalities could employ to block the project.

A source in Victoria said the most probable weapon would be a joint injunction application against Valleyview Memorial Gardens Ltd., a national company which took over the financially-troubled cemetery last summer.

Hatley Gardens manager Roy Reynolds said the crematorium is under construction now and should be operating by summer. The company obtained a certificate of convenience from Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Jim Neilsen — who regulates cemeteries in B.C. — two weeks ago allowing it to go ahead.

But the councils claim the government has reneged on a promise to keep the cremation field clear for the Royal Oak cemetery, which has been jointly owned and managed by Saanich and Victoria for almost 50 years.

They have a letter from Finance Minister Hugh Curtis, MLA for Saanich and the Islands and former mayor of Saanich, in which he states the government will not allow another crematorium at Hatley Gardens.

Until now Royal Oak had the only crematorium on southern Vancouver Island. One Victoria alderman says it can handle all the cremations on the Island if necessary. It does them at only $1.50 over cost and a competitor — if he gets enough business from funeral homes who now direct cremations to it — could turn Royal Oak into a money-loser.

COUVELIER

There was one at Ladysmith, operated by Robert Hagel who last year sold Hatley Gardens to Valleyview, but it was ordered closed by the government last year because perpetual maintenance funds had been depleted.

There was a similar problem at Hatley Gardens and the Colwood Burial Park next door, which Hagel also sold to Valleyview. People with relatives buried there have complained in recent years that graves have been neglected.

At one point in the early 1970s, the Colwood Burial Park was placed under government trusteeship for more than two years because cemetery trust funds were insufficient to meet the cost of upkeep.

Saanich and Victoria councils fear a similar situation could develop at Hatley Gardens, but the new manager says Valleyview is the largest Canadian cemetery company, with operations everywhere except Newfoundland and shares listed on the Toronto and Montreal stock exchanges.

It's not going to cream the profits off and then leave, he said.

Hatley Gardens needs the crematorium because nearly two-thirds of Victorians who die these days want to be cremated.

"Victoria is the cremation capital of Canada," he said.

Anyone in the business has to be able to offer both cremations and burials and a crematorium is definitely needed at Hatley Gardens, he said.

As well, it needs the revenue to fix up the deteriorating graves.

"It's important we have a source of revenue not only to maintain them but to bring them up to standard," he added.

"We applied and were granted a certificate and we're proceeding with construction. Frankly, it's as simple as that."

Reynolds said he was transferred from the company's Calgary operations last year "and told to clean things up" at Hatley Gardens and Colwood Burial Park.

CRD directors approve own 22% pay increase

Capital Regional District directors voted themselves a 22¼ per cent pay hike on Wednesday.

Only four directors opposed the increase.

Ald. Bob Wright of Victoria said he will give his extra $685 to the Chinatown renewal fund as a tax-deductible donation.

Ald. John Mika of Saanich said the CRD should wait until Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm announces his new salary guidelines for elected municipal officials.

Central Sannich mayor Dave Hill and Victoria mayor Bill Tindall said the increase is not in keeping with hold-the-line negotiations between municipalities, the CRD and their employees.

But board chairman Jim Campbell said the increases are necessary if more people were to be encouraged to hold office.

Campbell's total salary goes from $13,129 to $16,194 and directors will now get between $3,620 and $7,240.

Home care could be better

Quality of homemakers services in the Capital Regional District is not as good as it should be, according to Royal Jubilee Hospotal board chairman Eric Simmons.

During a discussion of home care nursing, Simmons told the regional district's hospital planning commission he has received numerous calls from people complaining that home care services have not helped them.

The services are provided by private and voluntary agencies under the provincial long-term care program.

UVic duo warms up to Mozart

By AUDREY JOHNSON

The celebration of Mozart's music continued at University of Victoria's recital hall Wednesday with a program of the violin-piano sonatas.

The artists were School of Music senior faculty members, Paul Kling and Robin Wood.

Two of the five works presented were among the earliest Mozart wrote in which violin and piano share an equal role. The E minor (K.304) is one of these and is unusual in having only two movements and also, to some degree, for the sense of sorrow that shadows it.

The program opened with one of the important Viennese period sonatas, the B flat Major (K.454) in which the violinist's big tone and fluent technique and the pianist's flowing style were immediately apparent.

The approach on Kling's part, however, appeared somewhat dry and laconic in the opening Largo-Allegro movement. The violinist warmed to the Andante, producing some fine shapings and the work concluded with an efficient if still matter-of-fact Allegretto.

Things were quite different with the following E minor.

Now the duo melded in a relationship that pervaded the rest of the program. Sensitivity of the violin voice emerged to color the wistful Menuetto with subtle and poignant nuances matched by the transparent and flowing phrases of the piano.

Equality between the partners in virtuoso technique and vibrancy, excellent bowing matching fluent passage work at the piano, brought brilliant life to the rendering of the E flat Major (K.481) and A Major (K.526).

The finale of the former is in theme and variation form and was entirely delightful, setting forth the elegance, felicity of phrase and bravura skills of both partners.

The great beauty of the slow movments of these, and the D Major (K.306), were sensitively played and notable for luminosity of tone.

This week-long celebration continues through Sunday, highlighted by the presence of the Viennese pianist, Paul Badura-Skoda, who will be heard in a recital of Mozart works Friday and in a concerto with the Little Orchestra of the University conducted by George Corwin on Sunday.

Peasant executed

PEKING (AP) — Peking newspapers reported that a peasant who fatally stabbed a bus conductor in a scuffle last month has been executed. One newspaper, the Peking Daily, warned that all murderers and lawbreakers will be punished swiftly and severely. The papers said Zhang Chunyao, a peasant from a suburban committee, was executed Monday. He had been convicted of murdering Cao Zhenxian on Feb. 17.

As the streets of Iran heat up over the flight of the shah to Egypt from Panama, an Associated Press-NBC News poll finds patience with U.S. President Jimmy Carter's handling of the hostage crisis wearing thin. For the first time since the incident began, less than half the public approves of Carter's actions, and 45 per cent said it's time to take up arms if that's what it takes to end the siege.

Muhammed Ali is growing out everywhere these days. Not only is the former world heavyweight champion boxer carrying about 25 extra kilograms, he's also sporting a moustache. Boxing observers say the moustache may make Ali more fashionable, but it won't help him in the ring. They say he'll need more than a stiff upper lip if he actually goes through with his decision to for a fourth world championship, at age 39.

Psychiatrist Thomas Harris, author of the bestseller I'm OK — You're OK, is suing various people for slander because they said he had committed suicide. Harris said his bookings have virtually stopped since a speech saying he had killed himself was broadcast over a Sacremento radio station.

When Ronald Salerno ran from a bank in Taunton, Mass., this week, with $1,523 allegedly taken in a stickup, he didn't expect Jake to be waiting for him. Jake is the police department's resident German shepherd — a genuine police dog — and like any good cop, he gave chase. Salerno — found up a tree a kilometre or so from the bank by police summoned to the robbery — gladly surrendered. Says patrolman John Crowninshield, "If you saw our dog, you'd surrender too."

If there's one thing 75-year-old Slim Payne can't abide, it's rock music, but he couldn't abide the skunk that homesteaded under the floor of his Dallas, Ore., home either. So he decided one deserved the other. Payne says he figured maybe the skunk would hate "this so-called new music" as much as he does. So for two days — with plugs in his ears and a local rock radio station blasting at full volume — he treated the skunk to a concert. It worked. The skunk left, but Payne isn't sure it was worth the effort. Says he, "I still don't know if that music was worse than the skunk or not."

Dear Abby

Here's the situation: Last weekend my 12-year-old son, Danny, asked if he could invite his 13-year-old friend, Steve, to sleep over. Naturally, I said yes.

When I went to make up the beds the next morning I found that Steve had wet the bed! I was really steamed because the mattress was ruined.

I told Danny about it, and he said that Steve never told him that he had a bed-wetting problem before he slept over, but the next morning when he discovered he had had an "accident," be begged Danny not to tell me or his mother about it.

What can I do, Abby? Should I tell Steve's mother (whom I haven't met) and hope she offers to buy me a new mattress?

Steamed

Dear Steamed:

I wouldn't. The poor kid probably has suffered enough humiliation as it is.

But do tell Danny to tell Steve that since such an "accident" can happen, if he plans to sleep over anywhere, he should bring his own bedding, plus a rubber sheet.

Dear Abby:

What is this world coming to? Yesterday I received a birth announcement, proudly announcing the birth of a baby girl. The mother is 21, the father is 40. He is married, but is separated from his wife of nearly 20 years! This man's wife and legitimate children live in the city and are well-known.

To top it off, the proud parents signed themselves, "Gator Guy" and "Wooly Woman". We were really stunned. My question: Is a gift in order for an illegitimate child?

Too Old To Cope

Dear T.O.T.C.:

There are no "illegitimate children" — just illegitimate parents. Don't penalize an innocent child because of the circumstances of his birth.

Dear Abby

Absolutely Anonymous, who complained about a bride's "disaster area" housekeeping, could be much like my mother was. For the first several years of my marriage, I kept house dreadfully in protest to my mother's super-cleanliness. Maybe this bride is overreacting, too.

My mother had seven bath rugs piled one on the other, the bottom one being for "company best." In ascending order they were for lesser categories of people, ending with an old but spotless rug on top for the family to use. That's only one item in her fanatic cleanliness. Would you believe carpet from the front door across the porch?

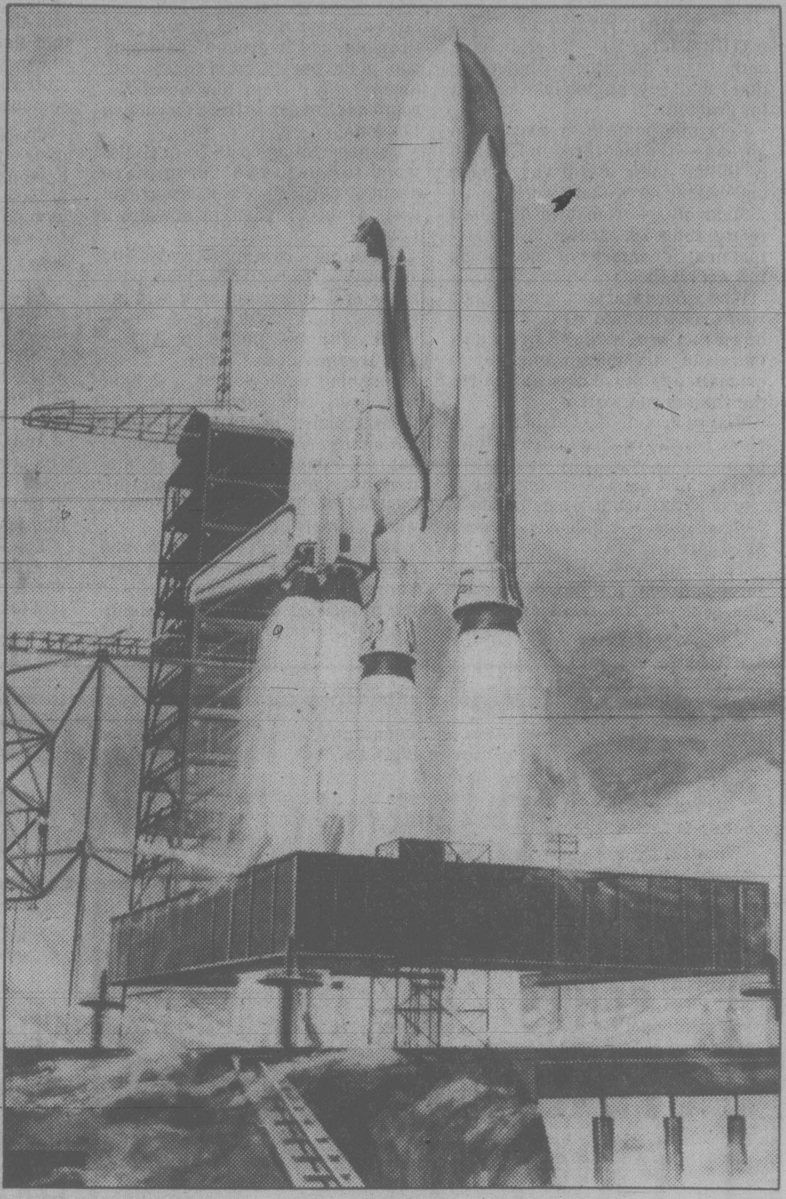
So, give that bride time. In due course she'll find out it's uncomfortable to live in a pigpen and she'll shape up.

Reformed Housewife

Dear Reformed

And what if she never shapes up? The bride who elects to live in a pigpen — for whatever reason — is inflicting her pigsty lifestyle on her husband.

Flying high with NASA's spacewomen



When space shuttle blasts off, it'll have a woman at the helm

SPACE CENTRE, Houston (AP) — Alan Shepard, John Glenn, Frank Borman, Anna Fisher, Shannon Lucid, Sally Ride.

Anna Fisher? Shannon Lucid? Sally Ride?

The connection may not be obvious, at first. But they and three other down-to-earth women, like their male counterparts who blazed a trail into the frontiers of space, are astronauts with their heads in the stars.

They, along with Judy Resnik, Rhea Seddon and Kathy Sullivan, have parlayed careers in chemistry, engineering, geology, medicine and physics into the chance to pioneer a new era in the cosmos aboard the Space Transportation System — the space shuttle.

"I guess the whole idea of women in space tickles just about everybody's fancy, maybe because it conjures up images from science fiction books, old movies and television," says Miss Sullivan.

"But sometimes I hear, 'Gee, you must really be a superwoman,' and that definitely isn't the case," says the 28-year-old marine geophysicist from Paterson, N.J.

Barring complications, the shuttle may go into earth orbit this summer on the first of more than 30 missions scheduled for the 1980s. The reusable craft — capable of accommodating a seven-member crew — will be used to deploy and retrieve satellites, conduct a variety of experiments and gather data in the earth and life sciences.

Although that means men and women astronauts will be working together in close quarters for up to 30 days, the women scoff at the idea that their presence will make any difference.

"I really don't know why that's always the biggest question," says Mrs. Lucid. "There's really no point to them. We'll all have jobs to perform. The situation will be nothing less than professional."

All six women are pilots. They're 28 to 37 years old. They weigh between 110 and 150 pounds and are between 5-foot-4 and 5-foot-11 tall.

Two are married. One has three children. Two are physicians who practise in local hospital emergency rooms on weekends. Four have doctorate degrees. One is an accomplished classical pianist.

Since no crews have been assigned past the initial test flights, it's doubtful any of the women will be airborne before 1982, almost two decades after Soviet cosmonaut Valentina Tereshkova circled the globe for four days to become the first and only woman ever to venture into the outer space.

But none seems particularly concerned about being the first woman in space. "Each of us has a particular area of interest, and we want to put that knowledge to use," says Miss Ride, a 28-year-old physicist from Encino, Calif.

For most of them, being an astronaut was always in the back of their minds, but was never a priority because the chances of being accepted seemed slim, especially since the number of space flights dwindled in the early 1970s.

Then in 1977, for the first time in eight years, NASA opened the door to its elite astronaut corps and chose 200 candidates from more than 8,000 applicants to undergo a week of extensive interviews and examinations.

Miss Sneddon, a 32-year-old Murfresboro, Tenn., native said she felt "like I had little chance of getting into the program, mainly because I didn't know what NASA was looking for."

"We (women candidates) didn't know if they were looking for pure scientists, those with a lot of flying experience or whether appearance, athletic ability and strength were factors," she said. "All we could really do was present ourselves and say: 'Here we are.' "

The field was narrowed to 35 astronaut candidates — 15 pilots and 20 mission specialists — who moved to Houston for 12 months of training that included a wide range of science classes, introduction to the shuttle system and emergency survival training.

Then each was assigned to work with NASA scientists and engineers on various shuttle projects in California, Canada, Florida and Texas.

"We tried to create a training program that would bring everyone with diverse backgrounds up to a point of basic space flight knowledge and then have them take that learning and use it as mission specialists to make recommendations," sais Capt. Alan Bean, a former astronaut who directs the astronauts' training program.

Although no one ever questioned the women's intelligence, Bean says, "there was some concern about how they would perform in the survival training phase, particularly because their upper body strength is less than a man's."

Miss Sneddon concedes some skepticism was justified. "Fifty pounds of parachute to a 170-pound man is nothing. But to a 100-pound woman, that's a lot of weight to carry around."

But "given enough time to think things through, we have proven we can handle any difficult situation — maybe not always in the traditional way — and still achieve the same results," she says.

Bean concedes it has taken time to open up the space program to women, but defends it as "practical . . . logical thinking" rather than "conscious discrimination."

In the early days of the space program "there were questions about what skills were needed," he said.

NASA "decided the most qualified for the jobs were test pilots, and the natural place to look was in the military where men with skills were at a premium.

"But I think the situation soon will equalize as the shuttle program expands to include a broader range of the intellectual population," he said.

This icy idea may leave you cold

By RONALD CLARKE

LOS ANGELES (Reuter) — Would you like to wake up one day in a brave new world, with the bad old times of 1980 just a memory?

If so, you will have to spend an unknown length of time after you die hanging in suspension in a stainless steel capsule in a temperature of 196 below zero C.

But if you can get over that cold shock there could be another life for you, says Laurence Gale, president of the Alcor Life Extension Foundation.

Gale, an exponent of life after death, said an associate organization, of which he is a vice-president, already has nine bodies in capsules waiting for the new dawn.

He intends to take a new route — he will have only his head put in a capsule when he dies. The people in the new world will have to find him a body, but storing a head is much cheaper than storing a body.

"The idea is that all the information on my body is locked up in the genetic code of my cells," he said.

"There would be cloning or a similar process and I would have to have a new body made," he said.

"The idea is that if you can save the information that is locked up in you when you die, there will be some technology later that will allow you to be put back together."

Gale's organization moves into operation the moment someone is pronounced dead. The body is moved in a box of ice to a laboratory at Emeryville, Calif. During the journey a life-support machine is kept working to maintain the heart and breathing functions.

In the laboratory, the body temperature is lowered and the blood is removed and replaced with chemicals which act as an anti-freeze and also have properties to prevent cells being ruptured, Gale said.

The body then is placed in a bath and the temperature is lowered to that of dry ice. The body can stay there for a week or so until a capsule — "a large stainless steel thermos bottle" — is built to store the body.

The temperature in the capsule is reduced to -196 with liquid nitrogen. The capsule is usually topped up with the liquid nitrogen every two weeks.

Gale, a computer consultant, said he got into Cryonics — the technique of freezing bodies with the intention of later bringing them back to life — because of an insatiable curiosity.

"We have considerable confidence we are preserving the memory, the personality and the sense of identity of the person because the parts of the brain are well preserved."

"Scientific evidence points to our being correct, although we do not have definite proof. But single cells and sperm have been frozen for many years.

"If I come back as a body that has no memory or sense of identity and my personality no longer exists, then I have failed.

How far away is the new world? Gale said 50 or 100 years from now he should wake up feeling young and vigorous.

"Biologists are building up life systems. Biochemists are tearing cells apart. The whole thing will come together and we will know the whole story," he said.

One of the problems is cost. Gale said preparing a body, placing it in a capsule and storing it for a year costs $12,600. From then on, storage costs are about $2,000 a year.

"A few people in capsules are still being paid for by relatives. But something happens to the relative and the body has to be buried," he said. "That is what happens to the majority of the people who are frozen.

"I am 37 years old and healthy and I have taken out a life insurance policy for $50,000 and made Alcor the beneficiary."

He has one thing going for him. The cost of storing a head is only $600 a year. And so, with interest mounting on his $50,000, Gale can afford to wait a long time.

"The idea appeals to the person who has a sense of challenge, the audacity to say we can do it," he said.

"There must be thousands of people interested in being frozen. But when they die, most just get buried."

Stroke victims can be rehabilitated

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

My father suffered a stroke about six weeks ago. His speech has been affected and he has weakness of his arm and leg. Even though his doctor tells us that it will be a long haul to recovery, we're beginning to wonder if he will ever recover completely.

Miss. H.T.E.

Dear Miss E.:

There was a time, about 25 years ago, when the victim of a stroke was thought to have little or no chance for complete rehabilitation and recovery.

Today, immediate and intensive medical care have greatly enhanced the chances of recovery of victims of stroke. It is no longer accepted that the stroke victim will vegetate and deteriorate.

Remarkable strides have been made in the rehabilitation of people who have had a cerebral vascular accident (C.V.A. or "stroke"). Dr. Howard Rusk, of the New York University Medical Center, is rightfully called the "father" of rehabilitative medicine. Many of his "sons" and "daughters" have been trained by him and dispersed all over the world, replacing despair with hope for stroke victims.

Intensive programs are designed to give physical and emotional support to these courageous patients, encouraging them to once again become happy, productive members of society.

Complete recovery depends entirely on the severity of the stroke and the part of the brain that is involved. The all-inclusive term of "stroke" is used to describe (1) a broken vessel in the brain (hemorrhage); (2) a clot (or "thrombus"); and (3) a spasm of the artery that brings blood to the brain. All three conditions deprive a part of the brain of the normal blood supply that carries vital oxygen to the brain.

It is interesting that the speech area in a right-handed person is situated in the left side of the brain. In a left-handed person, the speech area is located in the right side of the brain. This knowledge, along with dozens of neurological tests, can determine the exact area of the brain that has been affected by the stroke.

As soon as the patient is able to be taken out of bed, rehabilitative programs are started. Besides receiving medical attention, psychological support is added to offer encouragement during the immediate post-stroke period. Undoubtedly, your father is receiving such help.

During the difficult time ahead, the greatest contribution you can make to your father is to show a consistent attitude of hopefulness and encouragement with his progress.

"Never missed a beat!"

Oh Canada! It's great to be home

By BRUCE LEVETT

TORONTO (CP) — I hereby give oath, swear and otherwise declare that I shall never again take Canada for granted.

Returning home after seven years abroad — the last three in England — is like doing a Rip van Winkle and waking up in a new world.

Suddenly, the dishwasher-sized refrigerator has grown into a six-foot monster capable of accepting a full week's food.

Where once you struggled to pack your groceries into string shopping bags in the checkout line, now there's a strapping young lad to cram it all into boxes and carry them out to your car.

You're driving the car in the first place because it costs about a third of the price you'd pay in England and because petrol — at the equivalent of $3.20 Canadian a gallon there — goes for a ridiculously cheap $1.20 here.

The same rent that goes for a three-bedroom townhouse in Croydon gets you a three-bedroom detached home with rec room and fireplace and in-ground swimming pool in the back yard in Guildwood, about as far from downtown Toronto as Croydon is from downtown London.

Transportation costs from Guildwood to downtown Toronto are about 50 per cent lower than travel costs from Croydon to downtown London.

In addition, commuter trains and subways in Toronto are clean, positively antiseptic compared with the rattling, jolting, filthy cars — covered with misspelled graffiti — that are the rule in London.

Shopping here can be a delight compared with shopping there. In the first place, food is much cheaper in Canada. Also, the English housewife — caught between a miniature refrigerator and mammoth food bills — seldom stocks up with a week's supply of food.

Instead, she nips round to the greengrocer or fruiterer each day. There, she must accept whatever the proprietor or his agents dump into the bag. Complain and you're told that it's the only fair way — otherwise you'd pick out all the good stuff and leave the rotten apples for somebody else.

The British are justly proud of their television production, but they have only three channels on which to view them. Two are BBC outlets with no commercials, the other is a free-enterprise operation which does carry advertising.

There is much to be said for watching a 90-minute program unbroken by "these important messages from our sponsors," but not everyone is crazy about the idea of paying the $100-a-year tax for the privilege.

And if you don't pay up, they have detector vans slowly prowling the dark streets like something out of an old war movie. The fine for an illicit peek is the equivalent of $200.

The majority of the English rent — rather than buy — their television set because that way they can just take it back to the rental agency when it goes strange.

The alternative, to call a repairman, just isn't considered.

It took us nine months of constant badgering to have a light fixture replaced. And five different workmen showed up over a three-month period to repair the switch on the washing-machine.

Workmen delivering electric stoves have a clause in their contract which states they need carry them up only one flight. If you live higher than that, make your own arrangements. A tip helps.

Got an extra bag of garbage this week? Sorry, guvnor, that's a pound — which translates into $2.65 Canadian.

One of the delights of London is the basic black cab. It's roomy, with wide doors for ease of access, can do a U-turn without pause through the incredible suffocation of London traffic, and is piloted by a man who knows every street, mews and cul-de-sac in The Big Smoke.

That pilot, however, can also be arrogant, grumpy and rude.

If he isn't going your way, chances are he won't pick you up. If it's at night in the theatre district there's no chance in it — he won't pick you up without extracting a promise of a tip of monstrous proportion.

And, at any time, if you should decline to tip him handsomely, expect to be followed down the street while the stricken, outraged driver comments loudly upon your lack of ancestry.

On the other hand, there are such benefactors as barmen and barmaids. They are not unionized and are paid under the table in cash — and a pittance at that — to escape tax.

They are almost impossible to tip. If they like the cut of your jib, they might have half a pint of bitter with you — but only one, mind.

In that regard, little has changed in Canada over the years. Tip at each drink or you'll find your friendly barkeep has enrolled you in Alcoholics Anonymous.

Anyone returning from a lengthy stay in London is going to miss the theatre — ballet, opera, plays, concerts, recitals. The strange thing is, however, that the British themselves, while constantly boasting of its excellence, really don't support it.

If it weren't for the tourists, the West End would long ago have gone dark. For one thing, the chronically underpaid British can't afford to become regular play-goers.

Agatha Christie's lightweight thriller The Mousetrap has been going for 25 years, but few Britons will admit to having actually seen it.

Returning to Canada from England is moving back to a vibrant, exciting atmosphere from a somewhat slower, staid pace.

Does it really matter that while we are shovelling our driveways in December, the British may still be picking roses?

It's great to be back, but don't let that discourage you. It was great to be there.

LSD reveals mind map

PALM COAST, Fla. (AP) — The mental images reported by users of hallucinogenic drugs have prompted a researcher to develop a "brain map" that may explain patterns found on Mexican Indian art and those perceived by migraine sufferers.

Dr. Jack Cowan, University of Chicago researcher, said he created the "brain map" after learning of reports that images seen by users of such drugs as LSD correspond to the cellular structure of the brain's visual cortex.

"It is a fact that after the administration of hallucinogenic drugs, including LSD, mescaline and peyote, many people have reported seeing geometric patterns in their visual fields," he said.

He is one of several scientists, including seven Nobel Prize winners, attending a meeting of the French Institute de la Vie sponsored by the institute and the Universities of Florida and Uppsala, Sweden.

He illustrated his presentation with paintings created by Mexican Indians while using peyote during various religious rituals.

The geometric shapes visualized by users of certain drugs seem to correspond directly to specific groups of cells in the visual cortexes of primates and humans, he said.

He said he identified columns and groups of cells — some shaped like pyramids — in the visual cortex by using existing physiological data and a series of mathematical computations.

His mathematical model of a brain map indicates that in the case of LSD, for example, the chemical causes a part of the brain to secrete another chemical that knocks out the stability of the nerve cells in the visual cortex. That causes the nerve cells to randomly shoot their impulses without any connection to actual external visual stimuli.

The resulting hallucinations experienced by the drug user correspond "exactly" to the shapes of the cells themselves.

Similar effects have been observed in clinical tests in which researchers applied pressure directly to the subjects' eyeballs. The direct link between the eye and brain caused subjects to see shapes similar to those seen under the influence of hallucinogens.

Fijian chief loved his fellow man

SUVA, Fiji (CP) — Were he alive today, Udre Udre, a 19th-century Fijian chief, would have a solid claim to inclusion in the Guinness Book of World Records. At least, if anyone has shot for his record of documented cannibalism, the challenger has yet to step forward.

The chief had an efficient method of recording the number of bokola — human victims — he ate during his lifetime. Every time a man was clubbed for Udre's pot, a stone was put away in a certain spot.

When Udre died, the stones numbered 999.

One of his descendants, Ratu (Chief) Emori Bolobolo, says that although Udre Udre's achievement is not a thing to be proud of in a civilized society, he is pleased nonetheless that his ancestor had the foresight to preserve history.

Although it is not known where Udre is buried, a tombstone was erected at the site of the stones. In fact, the foundation of the tombstone consists of the very 999 stones Udre used to keep tally of his bokola.

The president of the Suva Rugby club, Tom Vuetilovoni, is a great-great-grandson of the old chief. This itself is ironic: in Canada, rugby enthusiasts have been seen driving cars sporting a bumper sticker that reads, "Rugby players eat their dead."

A peek at passion's fashion

By STEPHANIE MANSFIELD
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — She is married with at least one child and has an income of about $20,000. She is in her 30s, rarely goes to the movies, watches more than eight hours of television a week, carries at least one major credit card and is politically conservative. There are thousands like her in suburbs everywhere.

She is a Frederick's of Hollywood woman.

"They giggle first, then they buy," said Frederick Mellinger, the purveyor of "passion fashions," the seller of soft-core seductiveness to suburban housewives who recently opened his fourth retail outlet in Maryland.

The company, which earned $25 million last year selling peek-a-boo undies, see-through peignoir sets and push-up bras, decided to take a survey of the average customers. What the survey revealed would surprise those who thought Frederick's of Hollywood was an X-rated mail order catalogue in a plain brown wrapper.

"We appeal to middle America," said Tricia McBride, supervisor of the Frederick's store in Landover, Md.

Of the 120 Frederick's of Hollywood outlets across the United States, all but three are located in suburban shopping centers. The appeal is so strong in the suburbs of Washington that the firm is opening one in Forestville, Md., just down the road from Andrews Air Force Base.

"Maybe it's because there are more women than men in the Washington area," he said. "Certainly, we have a lot of customers in Maryland."

Take Mary Dallas, for example. She drove from Virginia, to Landover recently to plunk down $50 in cash for a slinky red disco dress and a black "push-up" bra. Wearing a fluffy brown wig, spidery eyelashes and a denim jacket with rhinestones spelling D-A-L-L-A-S, the 37-year-old said she stops at Frederick's because, "They got sexy clothes."

The average Frederick's customer, spends $45 at a time, the survey showed, and most likely will purchase a laced, padded push-up bra ($15) or a padded "Fanny Former" girdle ($9.50) or nylon "Baby Doll" lingerie ($15). The "gag items," like Playboy Bunny costumes or heart-shaped G-strings, glittery pasties or "Frederick's Kissable Bust and Body Balm," are big sellers for holidays, like Valentine's Day, Christmas and Mother's Day.

"It's clean sexy," said saleswoman Barbara Wall. "It's not blatant. It's titillating, but not pornographic."

At another Frederick's store, manager Diane Spano said housewives drive hundreds of miles twice a year to stock up on items.

"It's more openly accepted now," she said. "People aren't embarrassed to buy something sexy like they were years ago. The image has changed. I think the demand is here for it."

She remembers the day a group of senior citizens wandered into the store. "One little white-haired old lady — she must have been in her 70s — said she had heard that if you don't have anything in the back, Frederick's will put it there," Spano said.

With her friends giggling, the woman tried on a padded girdle. "She loved it," Spano said. "She came out of the dressing room and said how one of the men at the senior citizen home would fall in love with her because she had a tush on her. The rest of the customers applauded."

One of Frederick's 'passion fashions' gets the once-over from Schatzie Heeres

Frederick's customers also include husbands, many of whom say the department store lingerie counters are too tame.

"I suppose it's that 'Total Woman' thing or something," said McBride. "They want their wives to be seductive."

Saleswoman Helen Miller recalled a middle-aged woman who frantically rushed into Frederick's one day, saying her marriage was on the rocks. "She bought all kinds of things," Miller said. "Pasties, a G-string, you name it, she bought it."

It may have worked, Miller said. The woman never came back.

"Oh God, we've received thousands of letters telling us how we've saved marriages," Frederick Mellinger said. "We feel we're performing a necessity, keeping the homes together."

Frederick's of Hollywood began in 1946 as Freddy's Fifth Avenue in New York, selling black lace underwear. Mellinger then moved to Los Angeles and went into the mail order business. By the early 1950s he had opened a few stores in the Hollywood area, selling mostly to entertainers and budding starlets. He became famous for lines like, "You'll never sue me for nonsupport" and for pioneering such fashion staples as the padded bra, sheer panty hose, padded girdles and hot pants.

"This country is very well endowed," says Mellinger. "Women's lib is fine in theory, but as a friend used to say, 'Vive la difference.'

As for his critics, who claim Frederick's of Hollywood is demeaning to women, that the "passion fashions" he sells are fantasies, that he exploits women's insecurities' and encourages them to use their bodies, not their brains, the 64-year-old Mellinger just sighs.

Frederick's of Hollywood does not sell sex, he says. "I think we're selling a dream come true."

Stepping into an uncertain future

By NAN ROBERTSON
New York Times

"How long does this jealousy period last?" said a plaintive woman's voice from the audience the other night. "Forever!" cried an answering chorus. And then everybody laughed — the kind of laughter that meant everybody understood.

The scene was a packed, emotion-charged room at the Barbizon Hotel for Women in New York, where women outnumbered men about three to one and virtually everybody was a stepparent or about to become one.

The audience had come to hear Making It as a Stepparent: An Open Forum sponsored by Doubleday, the book publishing concern. A psychologist, a registered nurse, and two authors who had written new books on being a stepparent, one a novel based on personal experience, were the panelists. Three of the four were stepparents.

Nancy Thayer, the author of the novel Stepping, ignited a spark in the audience when she said: "I was jealous of my husband's first wife. I was jealous of the money, the time, the commitment he gave her. As for his children, they were the walking, breathing sign that he had loved somebody else first." She added: "One mistake I made was that I was so desperately jealous I wanted to lure my stepdaughters into our home."

Thayer said in answer to a question that she had stopped being jealous of the first wife when she had her own children, who were born after she acquired her stepdaughters. In turn, her steppdaughters became "furiously jealous of my sweet little babies."

The other panelists were James Meltzer, chief psychologist at St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hospital here and co-director of the Step-Family Project at the William Alanson White Institute; Holly Brown, a registered nurse and supervisor in family therapy at the Jewish Board of Family and Children's Services; and Claire Berman, author of Making It As a Stepparent and director of public education of the North American Centre on Adoption, a division of the Child Welfare League of America. Berman, a mother of three, is not a stepparent.

Berman said she wanted to explode two of the most prevalent myths about stepparents. One was that of the "wicked stepmother" taken from fairytales and the other was that of "instant love: I will instantly love children not born to me." She added that "your stepchildren will like you if you're lucky and possibly love and grow with you." She said that all stepparents were striving against great odds to make two families work.

Meltzer called being a stepparent "an invisible phenomenon" until very recently. He spoke of how easy it was to gather crowded classes and meetings on "alcoholism, bed-wetting, loneliness — but nobody came to courses about being a stepparent."

"People weren't ready to talk about it in public," he added.

Berman said her research had also showed very few books on the topic.

Brown spoke of the problems of privacy and sex that newlyweds can experience in a second marriage where there are stepchildren. Arriving home from a 12-hour honeymoon in a Manhattan hotel and heading for their bedroom, she and her new husband were astonished to hear her small son ask his stepfather: "Where are you going? Aren't you going to sleep in my room, in my bottom bunk bed, like you did before?" Brown said that although she and her husband are professional therapists, they didn't know what to do.

She provoked lively interest from the audience when talking about the "period of mourning" that all children feel about the dissolution of their parents' marriage and entry into a new marriage. She said that her team studies had shown that "it takes about three years before stepchildren and stepparents can relax and show their anger" to one another. If the anger is suppressed, she said, the mourning period can last a lifetime.

Meltzer said this stifled anger was most often diverted into squabbling about mundane, if important, things: table manners, socks on the floor, uncapped toothpaste tubes, dirty dishes in the sink, loud stereos. He and other panelists stressed that tough as it was, stepparents also had to talk to children about more crucial matters. Brown suggested that before grappling with family members, stepparents could thrash out their problems by forming their own groups similar to the Parent-Teacher Association.

Despite the forum's title about "making it" as a stepparent, it became obvious the other night that the audience had known more tears than cheers in the process. The moment of truth was when Brown, drawing from her own therapy-group experience, described how constructive it was when all four adult principals — mother, father, stepmother and stepfather — "sit down together to talk about their concern for the children." There was a gust of unbelieving laughter. Brown laughed too, but appeared chagrined. "It can happen," she said. "It's got to be rare," called out a member of the audience while heads nodded.

Julia Child faces up to an ugly kitchen task on the set of her TV cooking show

This silly squeamishness is going to have to stop

By BARBARA HANSEN
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — North Americans, said Julia Child, will have to get over their "silly squeamishness" and face up to the realities of the farm and barnyard.

Child, in other words, has become an advocate a backyard rabbit raising, a pursuit repugnant to those who think in terms of fluffy pet bunnies.

In her latest book, Julia Child and More Company (Knopf, paperback: $9.95), she recommends that readers raise their own rabbits as an economy measure and even include an address where they can write for instructions. This advice goes with a menu featuring leek and rabbit pie.

Those who would rather starve may have to do just that. "We have to stop all that squeamishness and start using all these things the way the rest of the world does," Child said. "We have been terribly spoiled in this country with low-priced food and energy."

As encouragement, she states that rabbit is "delicious," meatier than chicken and low in fat. "Rabbit makes a marvelous stew," she said. She also likes rabbit back roasted with a mustard coating, a recipe not in her books.

Child, who was in Los Angeles on a promotional tour for her book, suggested other economy measures.

One is better butchering, the responsibility of the meat industry. Child objects to the way meat is cut, particularly beef chuck. She points out that a seven-bone chuck roast includes steak meat, stew meat and braising meat, each requiring different treatment. As a result, when she makes a pot roast with this cut, the meat cooks unevenly.

The French, on the other hand, are masters at meat cutting. "They can get steaks out of the strangest cuts of meat," she said.

While properly cut meat, home grown rabbits and garden vegetables can ease the budget, another factor is perhaps more important. "Learn how to cook," said Child. "If people know how to cook, they can cope with almost anything.

"Don't waste any time in the kitchen mooning about and looking at TV. Do something.

Child points out the French and Chinese as models of economy. "The French throw nothing out," she said. "Sometimes you wish they would."

Child does not plan to cut down her own food budget. "We've always done about the same thing," she said, meaning the Child household dines on a blend of expensive and less expensive dishes.

Frequently on the menu are beef stews, made with the chuck, and chicken dishes. "Chicken is versatile," Child said. "You can do almost anything with it."

When economy is the issue, the egg may come before the chicken. "Eggs are economical and a good source of protein on a limited budget. There are so many dishes you can do with them," Child said.

Child will not commit herself on the future except to say she would like to return to France to "refurbish" herself, which would involve some pastry studies.

She is thinking about a book of 30-minute menus, the sort of quickies featured in her earlier television shows, but definitely will not produce a low-cost cookbook.

"That would get terribly boring," Child said.

Feed me! I'm yours nutrition matters

dr. elizabeth bright-see and jane hope

"Love isn't equal to the amount of food your child easts." We wish we had said that first but it's taken from a delightful little book called Feed Me!, Im yours, by Vicki Lansky (Bantam Books). This book has been around for some time but the most recent printing has been updated to include recipes for sugar-free, homemade baby foods. Most commercial baby food manufacturers have stopped adding sugar or salt to most of their products because of pressure from consumers and health professionals. But one study found that mothers who were making their own baby foods at home were adding more salt and sugar than manufacturers had put in originally!

Good nutrition is critical for a baby as many nutrients are needed for its very rapid growth. Also, what you were fed as a baby and a child may, indeed, affect your health in later years.

The Nutrition Committee of the Canadian Pediatric Society has recently released their recommendations for infant feeding. They offer some very sound, practical advice.

They state that breast milk is the best food for a baby until it reaches six months of age. If, for some reason, breast feeding is not possible, a commercial formula should be used. Whole cow's milk should not be used because it contains more protein than the baby can handle; the breakdown products that result will be excreted in the urine. This causes extra water to be passed and, as a consequence, the baby may become dehydrated.

Solids may be started at about six months of age. Introduce pre-cooked cereals first — they're a good source of Iron which the baby starts to need about this time. Fruit juice may be introduced at the same time as pureed fruit. But don't use fruit juices as a liquid to replace milk. Meats should not be added until after cereal and fruit and never when you first begin to start solids.

Introduce solids one at a time. Always wait a few days before starting a new one. This makes it easy to determine whether or not the baby is allergic or intolerant to any one food. Don't add salt or sugar to either home-prepared or commercial baby foods. You may think the food has no taste, but your baby won't mind. Babies have very sensitive taste buds and don't like strong flavors.

Breast feeding may be stopped at six months but it should be replaced by a commercial formula, whole cow's milk and whole evaporated milk (diluted with an equal amount of water). Don't use skim or two per cent milk before one year of age. The baby needs the fat in whole milk for energy (calories).

Commercial formulas are nutritionally complete — you shouldn't use vitamin or mineral supplments with them. But breast milk is low in vitamin D so 400 I. U. supplements of this vitamin a day is recommended for breast-fed babies only. Extra iron isn't necessary until three to four months for the healthy formula-fed baby or six to seven months for the breast-fed baby. The needed iron can be obtained from iron-fortified commercial formulas, infant pre-cooked cereals and meats, or iron drops — one milligram per kilogram (or half pound of the baby's weight per day.

Vegetarian diets which are high in fibre are not recommended for children under two years of age.

There is no absolute proof that fat babies become fat adults. However, if your baby starts gaining weight rapidly (and is not also growing longer), the total calorie intake should be slightly restricted. This should be done by decreasing the intake of solid foods but not of milk. Overweight infants shouldn't lose weight, but they should have their weight gain slowed down until they grow taller.

All of these recommendations are for healthy, full-term infants. Babies who were premature, very tiny at birth or have other health problems, should receive special care and feeding as directed by your doctor.

They tie an electric string around forgetful fingers

Los Angeles Times

BUENA PARK, Calif. — So it's the 27th of March. Your spouse has been acting funny. Was there some special reason you were supposed to remember today? Trash collection day? Andrew Young's birthday?

Sorry, sport, it's your anniversary, and if you have to ask him-her, it's too late.

The forgotten special event is a staple of TV sitcom, slapstick, comic-strip humor; without it, Lucy and Ricky would never have made it through the first season's ratings.

And that staple (forgetful mate, sulking spouse) may soon join ethnic jokes on the rubbish heap of humor if Ron Theodore and Carole Miller have anything to do with it.

The L.A. area business partners are already in the reminding game, operating a beeper service, an electronic string-around-the-finger.

But when Theodore forgot his mother's birthday a few weeks back, both he and Miller decided that something must be done. So they set up, as much for themselves as anyone else, Forget Me Not, a service that, for $5 a year, will remind yu by post and by phone of three Big Dates in your life. There's a 75-cent charge for each additional anniversary.

"There are a lot of things most people take for granted," said Theodore, still remorseful at his own forgetting. "Unfortunately, we neglect them, and have a tendency to take these (special occasions) for granted."

The service is aimed foremost at the "business market" — doctors, lawyers, accountants — "who are extremely busy all the time, and these things slip their mind."

But, Theodore agreed, it is the sort of service just about anyone can use: reminders of an upcoming theater date for which tickets were bought six months earlier; gentle postcard proddings that your vacation flight for Europe is leaving next week.

Birthdays and anniversaries are still the big ones, though, he believes. "A lot of people, like myself, just do not keep that kind of a record. And the worst time to try to do something about it is afterward — you go home and you're in big trouble. You're in the doghouse."

Although the standard cartoon construct of a forgotten anniversary is that of a harried, absent-minded husband who can't for the life of him think why his wife is all dolled up for dining out in midweek. Theodore said two of his first three "takers" for the service were professional women who wanted reminders of the big days in their lives.

"It's on the same principle as a wake-up call," he reasoned. "We sometimes forget, and we need someone else to do the remembering for us."

If a paid-service reminder takes away some of the spontaneity and the romance — well, how's the little man, or little woman, going to know? And anyway, argues Theodore, "I'd rather spend the five bucks for the reminder than go home and face the music without it."

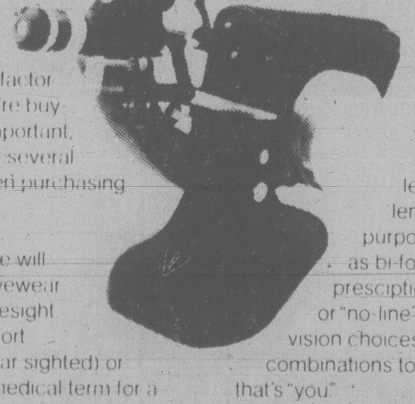
All about the other half of buying eyewear.



Many consumers have been finding out that price isn't the only factor to watch for when they're buying eyewear. Price is important, of course, but there are several factors to consider when purchasing your eyewear.

Let's discuss vision.

Eventually, everyone will require some kind of eyewear for better day to day eyesight. You may be myopic (short sighted) or hyperopic (far sighted) or presbyopic (that's the medical term for a weakened, mature eye condition found in people over forty years of age.) You'll need the right kind of eyewear to correct your vision. For reading. For seeing things up close. Or for looking far away. When your doctor gives you a prescription for your eyewear, your first decision will be selecting the type of lenses and frames that will best suit your eye condition and your lifestyle. Glass lenses. Soft contact lenses. Hard contact lenses. Or special purpose eyewear such as bi-focals, tri-focals, presciption sunglasses or "no-line" continuous vision choices and combinations to select one that's "you."

Your next step will be choosing a dispensing optician who will have the knowledge and experience to help you select the eyewear that's best for you. Prescription Optical's trained professionals have been the leaders in eyewear for over fifty five years, helping people with all kinds of special eyewear problems. We fill more cataract eyewear prescriptions than all of the other dispensing opticians combined. So you can be sure that your prescription will be filled quickly and accurately.

There are no bargains in eyewear. You get exactly what you pay for. Look for professional personnel, quality products and competetive prices. You'll find all of these important reasons at Prescription Optical. We'll be here to help when you want to see things more clearly.

Posties want politicians included in negotiations

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Union of Postal Workers wants a Liberal politician to represent the government in new contract talks, on grounds the middle-management bureaucrats now doing the negotiating have no authority to make decisions.

In an opening submission at public hearings Wednesday before a three-man conciliation board, Jean-Claude Parrot, CUPW president, said his 23,000-member union is being forced to negotiate a new contract with "representatives of the employer who have no right to make decisions."

The only time the union has had negotiators able to make decisions that led to a settlement was in 1975 after a 42-day strike when then Liberal postmaster-general Bryce Mackasey and his deputy minister represented the government in the talks, Parrot said.

Parrot later told reporters the union wants someone with direct access to Prime Minister Trudeau and his cabinet — perhaps Postmaster-General Andre Ouellet — to participate in negotiations. This would cut out several middlemen and speed the pace of talks.

"The politicians end up making the decisions anyway without really knowing what is going on," he said.

He said the union has made the request to the government for more senior negotiators and has proposed in return to have on its side a representative of the Canadian Labor Congress, an umbrella union organization representing 2.3 million workers across the country.

Meanwhile the post office marketing director told the hearing that private couriers and electronic communications technology will overtake the need for a federally-run mail service unless Canada Post maintains fast delivery and staff flexibility.

Harold Nightingale said the post office's "existence is in jeopardy ... if Canada Post fails to adequately and safely deliver messages or information or funds or goods."

Private companies are already cutting into the post office's traditional delivery market, however, by 1990 almost 30 percent of all mail could be electronically transmitted.

Employees have to be flexible and willing to keep pace with changing technology and accept training courses, he said.

Parrot said his workers want protection against nepotism, increased wages and better on-the-job safety precautions.

Parrot, who was released from jail last Saturday after serving two months of a three-month sentence for defying back-to-work legislation, produced evidence that supervisors had given jobs to their families.

There were also 65,000 outstanding grievances against management, who he said refused to co-operate with the agreement.

Quebec MPs beef up fight

OTTAWA (CP) — Quebec Liberal MPs said Wednesday more aggressive campaign tactics must be used if the federalist forces headed by Quebec Liberal Leader Claude Ryan are to win the sovereignty-association referendum.

MPs denied published reports that Ryan's leadership had been criticized at a meeting this week of federal Quebec Liberals. However, the MPs did not hide their concerns at what they considered to be the flagging fortunes of the federalist cause.

A recent public opinion poll said a majority of Quebecers are prepared to vote yes when asked in the spring referendum if the provincial government should be given a mandate to negotiate sovereignty-association with the rest of Canada.

"Many of us felt the no position was leading before Christmas and that since then the yes side has gained considerably," said Warren Allmand, MP for the Montreal riding of Notre-Dame-de-Grace.

"Many of us are concerned about that. We want to put more force behind the no side."

Justice Minister Jean Chretien, who heads a committee of MPs to co-ordinate federal government activities in the referendum campaign, agreed with Allmand.

"I have some impressions the federalist argument has not been heard."

Some of the MPs reluctantly admitted that they felt the Parti Quebecois had scored more points than the Liberals in the recent national assembly debate on wording of the referendum question.

Many MPs said they did not feel bound to limit their campaign activities to those sponsored by Ryan's umbrella group.

"We are going to be working like hell whether we do it in the no committee or outside the no committee," Allmand said.

However, he promised that Liberal MPs would be in constant communication with Ryan's group.

Axworthy pledges direct job creation

HALIFAX (CP) — The Liberal government will reinstate direct job creation programs, federal Manpower Minister Lloyd Axworthy said Wednesday.

Axworthy told reporters the decision to phase out the Canada Works program by the former Progressive Conservative government was a mistake.

He said Canada needs a mix of employment programs including tax incentives to private industry and direct employment programs in order to provide jobs in areas of chronic unemployment.

The govermment will focus on skills lacking in Canada rather than on particular geographic areas.

He said training programs must be changed to enable young people to move into more highly skilled jobs.

Axworthy was in Nova Scotia on the first stop of a tour of the provinces to familiarize himself with priorities and issues.

Polar bears die in oil experiment

WINNIPEG (UPC) — Government veterinarians, faced with an outpouring of public outrage, confirmed Wednesday a second polar bear has died from an $80,000 test in which they were dunked in crude oil to study the effects of spills on the rare animals.

One polar bear died by ingesting crude oil it tried to clean off its white fur, a second that was suffering from kidney failure had to be destroyed Tuesday for "humane reasons" and a third was ailing, pathologists said.

A fourth polar bear that was captured but was not used in the experiment will be sent to a Minneapolis zoo.

The experiment conducted last month by Dr. Nils Oritsland of the University of Oslo was to have been conducted last year but was postponed when Churchill residents protested. Experts had said none of the bears would be harmed and their deaths were certain to spark considerable public outrage.

The first bear died this week in Churchill and two others were immediately flown to Assiniboine Park Zoo for observation.

Dr. Frank Juck, a veterinary pathologist of the Manitoba department of agriculture, acknowledged Wednesday a second bear had to be destroyed Tuesday night to release it from its misery. It was suffering from kidney failure.

Of the third bear, Juck said "so far it's alive and seems to be reasonably well. We don't know which way it's going to go. It's not as vigorous as a bear should be, but whether that's related to other things we don't know."

The $80,000 experiment involved immersing the polar bears in water covered with oil to determine the effects any oil spill in the Arctic would have on the world's dwindling polar bear population. It was funded by the federal department of Indian affairs and northern development.

Dr. J.A. McPhedron, head of the veterinary division, said it could take 10 days before he can report exactly why the oil killed the first bear.

"Quite frankly, one of the possibilities that didn't cross my mind was of the bear ingesting oil by licking. Maybe it was just flushed out so badly it damaged its gut lining, but I think we'll find more than that."

McPhedran said the main purpose of the "very, very thorough" examination of the dead animal was to pinpoint what damage it suffered.

McPhedran said he wasn't sure what the practical applications of the experiment might be.

CNR unveils two-track plan

WINNIPEG (CP) — Canadian National Railways will double-track 40 per cent of its mainline between Winnipeg and Vancouver probably by 1988, Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin said Wednesday.

R. A. Bandeen of Montreal, president and chief executive officer of CNR, added that the entire western route could be double-tracked by the end of the decade, depending on traffic demands.

Bandeen, who did not give an estimated the total cost of the project, said the cost of building each mile of track west of Red Pass Junction in British Columbia would be about $2.7 million. Each mile east of that point would cost about $1.3 million.

Double-tracking the CNR main line was proposed by Prime Minister Trudeau during the last federal election campaign, but many in the West did not take Trudeau's campaign promise seriously.

Members flee N.B. fire

FREDERICTON (CP) — More than 200 persons, including 30 members of the New Brunswick legislature, were evacuated from the Lord Beaverbrook Hotel in downtown Fredericton early today when fire swept through the sixth floor.

No one was injured in the blaze, which was confined to the sixth floor of the seven-storey hotel.

Yukon PCs bring in deficit budget

WHITEHORSE (CP) — Yukon's Progressive Conservative government delivered an $89.7-million budget to the legislature Wednesday and announced an expected deficit of $3 million.

Yukon government Leader Chris Pearson called the budget one of restraint, but added that he hoped it would spur the Yukon's troubled economy.

The territory's economy is in a slump, but Pearson said the expected opening of two new small mines this year and a continued road construction program would "turn things around very quickly."

Although the budget projects a deficit, the Yukon government will only have to dip into an existing $8-million surplus from previous years to cover the deficit.

Yamani visiting Ottawa

OTTAWA (CP) — Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, Saudi Arabia's minister of petroleum and mineral resources, arrived Wednesday for informal talks with members of the federal cabinet today and Friday.

Yamani, considered one of the most influential voices in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, who arrived in a private Boeing 707 jet aircraft, was greeted by Energy Minister Marc Lalonde and the Saudi and Moroccan ambassadors to Canada.

Yamani did not speak to reporters before leaving the Uplands military airport by limousine.

Dukes: cars, crashes, cuties

scott's world

by vernon scott

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Dukes of Hazzard is about a coupla good ol' boys who used to run 'shine and now just run Boss Hogg ragged. They live down South.

You know what that means on television: car chases, car crashes, crooked sheriffs and cutie pies.

What hath Burt Reynolds and Hal Needham wrought? Since the success of Smokey and the Bandit there are now three imitations on the air. Dukes, plus BJ and the Bear and The Misadventures of Sheriff Lobo.

Probably, nobody takes this Dogpatch stuff seriously, or believes that it's any more representative of the South than Dallas is of Texas. On the other hand, it is getting a lot of attention.

In less than a year the CBS series shot to the top of the Nielsen ratings. It's in Friday night harness with The Incredible Hulk and Dallas.

John Schneider, the golden-haired Bo Duke, and Tom Wopat, the dark and rugged Luke Duke, have set millions of female hearts to fluttering. Catherine Bach as Daisy Duke, whose wardrobe of cut-off jeans and halter tops is right out of Li'l Abner, is having her effect on the men.

Sorrell Booke is Hogg, the crooked boss of Hazzard County, whose oink is worse than his bite.

Shortly after the series reached the No. 1 spot in the ratings — temporarily, as it turned out — Schneider was asked his reaction.

"Incredible," he says, in what seems to be a mixture of disbelief and pride. "Well, it's the same thing we said in the beginning, it's fun. People always like to have fun."

The Dukes of Hazzard is escapist fare, but how escapist is it? Well, Schneider referred to the Hulk as a show that's fun and makes you think, to Dukes as strictly fun, and to Dallas as a show for thinkers.

Does this mean Dukes doesn't require anyone to think?

"Well," he says, and pauses. "I don't mean it's a stupid thing. I mean, you can just sit back and enjoy yourself."

Fair enough, since that's all most television requires.

The series' first five shows last year were filmed entirely in Georgia. Then the production company moved to the Burbank Studios headquarters of Warner Brothers Television for eight made-for-TV shows for the first season.

This season Dukes will make 26 episodes, a testament to the show's popularity. Normally, a series only has 22 shows a season.

Schneider, a native of Sandy Springs, Ga., who was cast in Atlanta, says he sometimes longs to return to film in Georgia "but nobody else does."

He admits the production goes faster here, which means it costs less, but says: "They sure have the little country roads back there you can't find here."

Dukes draws about 12,000 letters a week from viewers, and a good percentage of those are addressed to Schneider, who at 25 possesses a boyish handsomeness that intrigues women of all ages.

Ask Schneider about being a male sex symbol and he comes close to blushing. That appears to be one subject he's uncomfortable with, despite his outgoing exuberance.

He apparently does have time for his fans, however. He answers all his mail and on personal-appearance tours spends hours signing autographs.

Oil hikes now 'less shocking'

Times News Services

PARIS — The world economy can absorb recent oil price rises better now than it could in 1973-74, the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) said Wednesday as Kuwait and Iran announced increases of $[illegible].50 U.S. and "about $2" a barrel respectively.

Senior officials attending OECD meetings in Paris said that a large part of a $70-billion oil deficit facing the industrialized states in 1980 would arise in countries with stronger economies, such as West Germany and Japan.

The brunt of the 1974 crisis was borne by the weaker economies of Britain and Italy, which needed help from the International Monetary Fund.

OECD officials said non-oil developing states face a 1980 deficit totalling $50 billion, but they said a large part of this would arise in more advanced countries like Brazil, The Philippines, Taiwan and South Korea.

The OECD considered that members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) would have a current account surplus of $120 billion in 1980.

But the OECD believes that world financial institutions could recycle the money, the officials said.

The OPEC surplus was down to $1-billion in 1978 before oil rose in price from around $13 a barrel to the current average of $29.65.

Iran's Oil Minister Ali Akbar Moinfar said today his country's oil increase would be about $2, but declined to specify the exact amount of the increase.

Iran now is charging an official price of $31 U.S. a barrel, but to this it adds a $3 premium on half the volume lifted, effectively making the price $32.50 U.S.

The news from Tehran took the oil industry by surprise, industry sources said.

There now is a modest glut of oil on the world market and new OPEC price increases had not been expected until later in the year.

OPEC members last raised prices in February.

The Kuwaiti oil price increase may not affect North America directly because virtually no Kuwaiti oil is sold to this continent.

Meanwhile, Venezuela has reduced prices for heavy industrial fuel oils by as much as $2 a barrel because of declining U.S. demand and high world inventories, Energy Minister Humberto Calderon Berti has confirmed.

Under its new rate schedule, Venezuela reduced its price for residual oil with a 2.8 per cent sulfur content to $20.30 a barrel from $22.30.

Oil with one per cent sulfur content oil was cut to $28.15 from $28.89 a barrel. The price of high-grade, low-sulfur oil was left unchanged at $32.25 a barrel.

Residual fuel is used extensively to heat large apartment and commercial buildings, to power utilities and for other industrial purposes.

Antoinette model-owner says 'Let them eat cash'

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A replica of Marie Antoinette's residence at Versailles, complete with 30 rooms including the ballroom where the United Nations charter was signed, is up for sale for $2.5 million. But the deal is for cash only.

The 86-year-old mansion, known as Le Petit Trianon, includes eight marble fireplaces, columned facade, marble-floored atrium, indoor fountain and 2,000 square-metres of living space.

Its heating bill is $300 a month, and taxes are $25,000 a year. The price is non-negotiable.

"We would like a family to buy it and we don't think it's so overwhelming that it can't be done," says Kevin White of Anderson Associates, the real estate agent handling the sale. "I know it sounds preposterous, but it's worth it."

White said the replica of the home Louis XVI gave to Marie Antoinette at Versailles in the 18th century is so well known as a San Francisco landmark that he is sure it would be bought within 90 days.

To aid the process, White put an ad in the Wall Street Journal — which he says drew 54 calls.

Twenty-five years ago, the house sold for $100,000.

Shaft mishap kills 23

Times News Services

JOHANNESBURG — A mine elevator cable snapped, plunging 23 miners more than 1½ kilometres to their deaths today at the bottom of the world's deepest and largest gold mine.

An official at the Vaal Reefs Gold Mine in Orkney about 95 kilometres southwest of here said three white miners and about 20 blacks were being lowered to work in the mine's No. 2 shaft when the cable suddenly gave way and sent the double-decker cage tumbling down the jagged rock face.

Nine rescue teams were sent underground to reach the wreckage where tons of rope and cable had toppled onto the cage.

The accident was the worst of its type at Vaal Reefs — the world's largest gold mine with more than 40,000 workers — but in a fire last year 102 miners died there.

Leftists threaten civil war

Times News Services

SAN SALVADOR — Leftist forces in El Salvador have moved a step closer to revolution by declaring themselves on a war footing.

And while members of the junta dismissed the move as an act of bravado, thousands of people jammed the Metropolitan Cathedral here today for a glimpse of the body of slain Archbishop Oscar A. Romero and new violence erupted in the strife-ridden Central American nation.

Political violence claimed the lives of 20 people, including 11 in Ciudad Barrios, the hometown of the slain archbishop 138 kilometres east of the capital.

Despite the government's show of confidence it has placed security forces on alert.

Meanwhile, all U.S. embassy dependents here have been evacuated for fear Romero's assassination would unleash massive violence, an embassy source said.

Boy, 7, smuggles marijuana

NEW YORK (AP) — A seven-year-old boy apprehended Wednesday at Kennedy International Airport was found to be carrying 11 pounds of marijuana, police said.

A spokesman said the incident reflects a new phase in the smuggling of drugs from the Caribbean.

"We've even had instances of kids being rented from their parents to fly down there and bring back drugs," said the official.

Police said the boy flew from Kingston, Jamaica, carrying an airline luggage carton full of plastic bags of Colombian marijuana. The boy's father, sensing trouble, ran away.

20,000 sterilized in Calif. prisons, hospitals

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — More than 20,000 people in prisons and state hospitals were sterilized involuntarily over a 60-year period in California, says a newspaper report.

The Times-Dispatch, in a copyright story in today's editions, said about 5,000 of those people — epileptics, the mentally ill, and those labelled idiots, fools and feeble-minded — were sterilized at Sonoma State Hospital in northern California.

Most of the sterilizations are reported to have occurred before 1950.

The number of people sterilized in California is more than double the number performed in Virginia, the newspaper said. The number of sterilizations in Virginia had been little noted until recent newspaper investigations.

"It was one of the earliest and most vivid examples of science trying biomedical engineering under a tremendously distorted theory," said Dr. Jonas Robitscher, professor of psychiatry and law at Emory University in Atlanta.

Sterilization of those at California state hospitals for other than medical reasons ended last January with the repeal of a law which had authorized sterilization of anyone who deviated from normal mentality.

That law, in effect since 1951, had many procedural safeguards that reduced the number of sterilizations. But state laws dating back to 1909 granted virtually unlimited discretion to state hospital officials to operate on anyone who fell under their care, said the Times-Dispatch.

F. Burns Vick, executive director of the California Association for the Retarded, told the newspaper there had been no opposition over the sterilization practice.

"It was quick and easy," he said. "There was almost no comment. There was no objection at all."

The newspaper quoted a report by Sonoma State's late administrator, Dr. F. O. Butler, calling the sterilizations "justifiable because of the hereditary factors involved and because of their (the patients) frequent inability to care for their offspring."

The report by Butler was an analysis of 25 years of sterilization at the hospital before 1945. Butler served at the institution for 31 years.

Hundreds of young adults were placed in the hospital for sterilizations because their parents thought they were sexually permissive or had behavioral problems, the newspaper said.

Subjects of sterilizations at Sonoma between 1919 and 1943 were described by Butler as patients admitted for care and training, sex difficulties, custodial care, general maladjustment, and epilepsy.

Walking on heir!

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Tim Twomey is one happy man!

Twomey, who made medical history in 1977 by receiving the first testicle transplant, now is the proud father of a baby boy.

The 33-year-old sheriff's deputy was born without testicles but got one from his identical twin in an operation performed in St. Louis by Dr. Sherman Silber.

His wife, Jannie, 29, gave birth here Tuesday to a six-pound, 14-ounce boy.

Of other such transplants, Silber said: "We are not about to embark on it without identical twins or an autoplant — from one part of the body to another — until the immunological problems that might lead to rejection have been solved."

Diet doctor left $220,000 to his slayer

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — The woman accused of killing the doctor who developed the Scarsdale Diet would receive $220,000 under his will, and $200,000 would go to the nurse who reportedly was the third member of a love triangle.

The will of Dr. Herman Tarnower, 69, was filed Wednesday in Westchester County Surrogate Court. It disposed of about $1 million, including the $220,000 to Jean Harris, who was indicted Tuesday in his March 10 shooting death, and the $200,000 to nurse Lynne Tryforos.

Mrs. Harris, free on $40,000 bail, faces 25 years to life in prison if convicted on the second-degree murder charge.

Conviction also would mean that she could not inherit Tarnower's money.

The doctor, who never married, was a long-time companion of Harris. Recently, he had been seeing Mrs. Tryforos, who is divorced.

The 13-page will also set aside $190,000 for the college educations of Mrs. Tryforos' two children and six children of his nieces and nephews. Method of disbursement was not mentioned.

Under the will, dated Jan. 21, 1980, the two Tryforos children, Laura and Electra, each also would receive $20,000 in a trust fund.

The will left $350,000 to be divided among 10 nieces and nephews, a cousin and an uncle.

Tarnower's sister, Pearl Schwartz, is to receive $1,000 and the doctor's $500,000 estate in Purchase, where he was shot to death.

Also named in the will was Tarnower's driver, Henri Von Der Breken, and his wife, Suzanne, who would each receive $32,000, on the basis of $2,000 for each of the 16 years they had worked for Tarnower.

Harris, 57, is the former headmistress of the posh Madeira School for girls in Greenway, Va.

She told police the killing was unintentional — that she had driven from Virginia to have Tarnower kill her, and that there was a struggle in which the doctor was shot four times.

Tarnower requested in the will that his remains be cremated and that his ashes be deposited in a pond on his property in Purchase. The body was not cremated, however, and was instead was buried at Mount Hope Cemetery in nearby Ardsley.

Colombia authorities expect more captives freed

Times News Services

BOGOTA — Leftist guerrillas may release four more hostages, but they are not expected to include any of the 19 diplomats being held at the Dominican embassy, government sources said today.

In addition to the diplomats, the April 19 (M-19) movement guerrillas are holding 10 men, mostly Colombian guests who were attending a diplomatic reception at the embassy when it was captured Feb. 27.

Three other non-diplomats, all Colombians, were released on Tuesday.

The reports that another four hostages could be freed came after a two-hour and 46-minute ransom negotiating session Wednesday. It was the longest round of bargaining since the hostages were taken.

The talks, the seventh round, were held in the same unmarked police van with its back doors removed that is parked near the front entrance of the embassy that has been the scene of the previous negotiating sessions.

The M-19 was once again represented by a tiny woman guerrilla wearing a black hood bearing the group's initials painted in white.

The diplomats held hostage include U.S. Ambassador Diego Asencio, Papal Nuncio Angelo Acerbi, the ambassadors of Switzerland, Egypt, Israel, six Latin American nations, two charge d'affaires and six consuls.

Twenty-four hostages have been freed by the guerrillas since the siege began.

Meanwhile, the permanent council of the Organization of American States Wednesday called the occupation of the Bogata embassy an unacceptable assault and a violation of the rights of man.

39 PERSONALS

LADIES WOULD YOU LIKE TO travel by lands or sea? For as long and as far as you want. If you are single, divorced, separated or single parent, no triangles please, age is not a factor. If you are in a rut read on. I am forty and debt free, have no ties, 6' tall, 200 pounds, can afford to do what little boys dream about and old men can't. Have a very large and plush car, travel in an extra large executive type holiday trailer, loaded with extras, microwave, TV, stereo, air conditioning, built—in power plant, can stop anyplace you please. Also have a very large live—aboard twin motored power boat, both trailer and boat have separate bedrooms for the ladies own convenience. This is your choice. Have not yet bought an airplane, sorry about this, but can fly. I like sports and outdoor life and have lots of hobbies. If you'd like to get away for a few days in the middle of the week or weekend, for a month or longer, I'm easy, the time is your own. The trailer or the boat are not sinbin's, I like to travel in comfort, but not alone. I've just arrived on the Island, and it's a lot nicer to travel with a companion, if you have funds, fine, if not, be my guest. There are no obligation whatsoever attached to this. Just honest, compatible relationship, and some trust. All it takes is a 17¢ stamp, a few minutes of your time and mine. I would like a photo, but not necessary. I hate writing, a phone is easier. Hold this ad for future reference. Victoria Press Box 243.

HOW TO WRITE

A GOOD

CLASSIFIED ACTION

AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room, etc., for rent, or property for sale; start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably by giving complete, definite information. Always include the price in your advertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, 8:00 to 5:30 p.m. Saturday. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

309 IN MEMORIAM

MOSS — In loving memory of our dear son and brother, John, who passed away March 27, 1964.

How strange he should sleep so profoundly,
So young, so unworn, by the strife
While beside him, brimful of hope's nectar
Untouched stood the goblet of life
God knows the depth of our sorrow
How bitter the trial must be,
And right through it all He is loving.
God knows so much better than we.

—Sadly missed by Mother, Dad and Sandra.

God in his wisdom has recalled
The boon
his love had given
And though the body slumbers here
The soul is safe in heaven.

Lime has its uses, in very small doses

Lime and fertilizers, like fire, alcohol and food, are good servants but bad masters. Both have to be used with discretion and understanding and the home gardener must have some knowledge of the chemistry of plants and the human body to use these two products wisely.

When food producers and food processors have made errors with fertilizer amounts which caused sickness among consumers despite laboratory tests and scientific knowledge, what guide has the home gardener?

Many gardeners look upon lime as a plant food, or fertilizer, and buy it in quantity because of its low price. Not until they have purchased two or three bags do they ask where and how it can be used.

The idea that lime must be applied to a garden every year, or every second year comes from the old English gardening books on which we have depended for guidance, and we find whole chapters taken from books printed in the mid-1800's quoted verbtim in those printed a century later.

Using lime in these amounts was sound advice when a garden the size of a city lot received two or three tons of animal manure annually. When local gardeners begin applying manure that frequently, lime will be needed as advised. The average garden has not had a bit of animal manure added in the last 30 years.

Lime is not a food for plants (a fertilizer) any more than calcium (a refined form of lime) is food for the human body, but a certain amount is necessary for plants and humans to extract chemicals from the food they consume.

Lime is a base, or alkaline, chemical which reduces acidity that locks up some chemicals needed for proper nutrition. It is also a catylist, combining with a chemical to change its form to that which plants and humans can easily handle.

When the chemicals in the soil are changed to a form usable by plants they are readily soluble in water and are carried away in soil water to the creeks, rivers and ocean, by heavy winter rainfall and summer watering. Therefore an excess of lime in a garden soil actually releases, and causes loss, of much needed chemicals, and severely reduces the fertility of the garden.

Cabbages and related plants need lime to prevent the club-root disease, as explained in a recent column, also lilacs which are alkaline-soil plants. Since cabbage and relations are grown in a different part of the vegetable plot each year, the whole plot receives sufficient lime unless quantities of animal manure are added each year.

Different lawn grasses which grow well here require different amounts of soil acidity in which to flourish, all needing a soil on the acid side of neutral. Lime is used on lawns only when the soil reaches such a high state of acidity that the grass can no longer obtain the locked-up food. This condition is met on golf courses where heavy use of acid-type fertilizers is necessary.

Since few home gardeners use quantities of acid-type fertilizers on lawns, and none would think of investing in the quantities used on a golf course, lime on the home lawn can be detrimental by reducing the natural slight acidity of local soil, causing the grass to die-out and leaving a condition that allows moss and weeds to take over.

There are two kinds of lime available, hydrated and dolomite. Hydrated lime is precipitated when hot lime is treated with water; dolomite lime is contaminated with magnesium, useful in heavily manured soil and bottom lands which lack this trace element and are naturally acid in reaction. Since only minute quantities of magnesium are needed in a soil, there are better ways of applying it than by using lime as the carrier in a home garden.

Guilty child-dump verdict

FERNIE (CP) — A Sparwood woman has been given a suspended sentence and two years probation for concealing the birth of a child and neglecting to obtain assistance in child birth.

Heather Mitchell, 23, pleaded guilty to the charge Feb. 20. A third charge of infanticide was dropped by the Crown. The charges followed discovery of the body of a baby in the Sparwood dump last August.

In his pre-sentence report provincial court Judge Leo Nimsick said there was no question there had been a deliberate attempt to hide the pregnancy.

Drowned in cesspools, buried alive with dozers

Times News Services

PARIS — Refugees who fled war-torn Afghanistan have described tales of mass executions that included drowning people in cesspools and burying them alive, a human rights investigator said Wednesday.

The executions at the main prison near Kabul were "carried out in a manner reminiscent of Auschwitz," said Michael Barry of the International Federation of Human Rights, a Paris-based umbrella organization of affiliate groups in 19 countries.

Barry, a New York native who is an Islamic studies researcher at Montreal's McGill University, detailed the testimony of about 100 refugees he recently interviewed in the Peshawar region of Pakistan.

He told a press conference that the refugees also spoke of the use of incapacitating gas, starvation and public rapes by the Soviet-installed Afghan regime.

The human rights investigator said since the Marxist takeover in Afghanistan two years ago, Soviet officials have been present at the Kabul prison. The massive Soviet occupation forces arrived in December.

Over the past two years, people have been imprisoned without trial and tortured at the Afghan Interior Ministry with electric shocks, beatings or by being hung from the ceiling for as long as 15 hours at a time.

"After the interrogations, which also included torturing wives to force confessions from reluctant husbands, the prisoners were taken to the main prison where torture was excretory in nature," Barry said.

He said prisoners were thrown into an enormous cesspool outside the prison while other inmates stood by helplessly and watched them drown in human excrement.

"After the (January) prison amnesty was granted, wives who came to the prison were told to look for their loved ones in the cesspool, which they did by searching for the bodies with long sticks while they wept."

He said another method of execution was live burial with bulldozers in a field near the prison of prisoners who were carted off every night.

Barry also said he has proof that Soviet troops are using gas and napalm against rebels in Afghanistan.

According to refugees' accounts, one gas, fired from tubes mounted on armored helicopters, looked like water vapor and caused uncontrollable itching and skin outbreaks, he said.

He said another type of gas appeared to be used by the Soviets as a psychological weapon.

"MIG (jets) have been dropping canisters in the valleys of this mountainous region for the last two months," he said. "A grey smoke comes out of them, thin at first, but then it gets thicker.

"The smoke rises and blocks the sun for several hours."

He said the evidence of napalm use is contained in interviews he recorded in the Persian dialect spoken by some of the refugees. He proposes to have them translated by Iranian jurists who cannot be suspected of pro-United States sympathies.

He also said four refugees gave him a second-hand account of a mass drowning of Hazara Moslems carried out by troops of the Afghan army commanded by Soviet officers.

According to the accounts, the Moslems, who had fled their village of Samangan near the Soviet border when it became the scene of fighting, were driven by truck to a river and drowned.

Iran charges Afghan gas plundered

LONDON (AP) — Moscow is "plundering" natural gas from Soviet-controlled Afganistan, Iran's official Radio Tehran reported Wednesday in a broadcast monitored in London.

Radio Tehran said that so far this year the Soviet Union has bought 30 times more gas from Afghanistan than in 1979 — at half the world price.

Among other things, the Soviets are using this pricing policy "to cover the cost of their 70,000-man military expedition to Afghanistan."

Radio Tehran said Iran would rather burn off its gas than "capitulate to bullying" and the Soviets "should pay a fair market price" to Afghanistan.

Talks between Moscow and Tehran on reopening the Igat gas pipelines to the southern Soviet Union collapsed two weeks ago. The Iranian government halted gas supplies through the pipelines earlier this year and demanded a five-fold price increase.

Western analysts have said the cutoff has caused shortages and rerouting of gas supplies in the Soviet Union and jeopardized lucrative sales to West Germany, Austria and France.

N.B. spuds sour border

Times News Services

AUGUSTA, ME. — Maine potato farmers protesting against market conditions have blocked seven border crossing points between New Brunswick and Maine, a state police spokesman said today.

Rick Moore said the farmers had dumped potatoes and used trucks to block all but emergency traffic on the routes.

The crossings cover the entire potato belt of western and northwestern New Brunswick. Other crossing points in southeastern New Brunswick were not affected.

Moore said police were keeping an eye on the situation but had not moved to clear the crossing points.

The farmers were protesting against low potato prices and the amount of New Brunswick potatoes on the New England market.

They claimed New Brunswick spuds are subsidized so farmers can dump them in the U.S. at prices that undercut the Maine growers.

The farmers said they were prepared to block the crossings throughout the night unless they received word from agriculture officials in Washington that action will be taken to support their cause.

Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan said he regretted the angry response by American farmers, but Canada will not reduce its shipments of million of tons of potatoes to the U.S.

U.S. Senate approves windfall oil tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate today gave final congressional approval to a compromise windfall tax on the oil industry, a $227-billion cornerstone of President Carter's energy policy.

The 66-to-31 vote sent the measure to Carter for his signature, 11 months after he recommended it.

Opponents contended the tax would deprive the oil industry of money needed for energy investment. Backers called it fair and well within the ability of oil producers and royalty-owners to pay.

The tax will take effect retroactively to March 1.

The bill is a compromise version of the $294-billion tax Carter recommended last April after deciding to phase out federal price controls on U.S. crude oil. He began decontrol in an effort to spur domestic oil production.

Decontrol will allow U.S. prices to rise to world market levels and cost consumers an estimated $1 trillion in the 1980s. The tax will take $227.7 billion of that windfall and, after other federal and state taxes are subtracted, will leave the oil industry $221 billion it would not have had under continued controls.

The tax will be paid by 12,000 oil producers and by hundreds of thousands of people who own lands from which oil is pumped.

The bill recommends that 60 per cent of the $227.7 billion — $137 billion — be set aside for income tax reductions. But that is not binding. Any tax cut would have to be approved by Congress in separate legislation.

An additional 25 per cent — $57 billion — will help lower-income families pay rising energy costs.

'Iranians given special screen'

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — The Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) said today it is conducting stringent screening of Iranians entering the U.S. and denied there is any go-soft policy to avoid incidents with them.

INS spokesman Silas Jervis said that, in addition to the initial check every person entering the U.S. undergoes, all Iranian entrants are being put through a secondary inspection.

In the face of FBI warnings that immigration policy is lax and terrorists from Iran may try to enter the country, Jervis denied a published report that the INS had been advised by state department officials to avoid any incidents involving Iranian immigrants.

More than 11,000 Iranianians have entered the country on temporary or permanent residence status since the hostages were taken in Tehran Nov. 4. One was admitted despite his carrying material on how to make bombs and strip a submachine gun.

Meanwhile, members of Congress today sharply questioned U.S. immigration policy on Iranians.

Rep. Bob Michel (Rep.— Ill.) charged that President Carter "has publicly misled the American people" on the admission of Iranians to the United States.

Guilty verdict on 65 counts

NEW YORK (AP) — Italian financier Michele Sindona was convicted today of all but one of 66 counts in a fraud indictment resulting from his operation of the New York-based Franklin National Bank which collapsed in 1974.

Each of the counts is punishable by five years in prison. U.S. District Judge Thomas Griesa set May 6 for sentencing.

Protest brews as doctor races for shah's life

CAIRO (UPI) — American heart specialist Dr. Michael DeBakey, said to be in a "race with survival" to save the deposed shah, visited the ex-monarch today in the military hospital where he is to undergo surgery to remove a cancerous spleen.

DeBakey's bedside examination coincided with tightened security measures around the hospital, including on roads and bridges leading from Cairo University to the medical facility on the eastbank of the Nile river.

Hundreds of students demonstrated Wednesday on the university campus, located on the Nile's west bank, to protest asylum for the shah in Egypt and demand his expulsion.

Black-uniformed policemen were seen lining up along the main road running past the hospital at suburban Maadi, 10 miles south of Cairo, all the way to the city proper.

The surgery for Mohammed Reza Pahlavi is scheduled for Saturday.

DeBakey arrived Wednesday on an unmarked jetliner crammed with medical supplies and blood and immediately visited the exiled monarch for what was officially described as a courtesy call.

But Dr. Ahmed Al-Hussein, a tumor specialist and one of 15 Egyptian doctors attending the exiled ruler suffering from an enlarged cancerous spleen, was less sanguine, explaining that preparations for the shah's surgery were being stepped up.

"Fixing the date of the operation immediately has become a race with survival and any delay would mean increasing the probability of danger to the shah's life," Al-Hussein said.

The semi-official Egyptian newspaper Al Ahram said Empress Farah approved preparations for the operation after she "was informed of the shah's critical condition and of the risks involved in the surgery."

The shah "is holding his own," he said. "He is very comfortable. He feels very weak but relaxed and happy to be here. There has been no change in the shah's condition since he left Panama" Sunday.

The shah left Panama the day before Iran was to formally ask for his extradition, infuriating the Iranian militants who have demanded the monarch's extradition as the price for the freedom of 50 American hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

In Tehran Wednesday, Iran's ruling Revolutionary Council, citing the ailing shah's move from Panama to Egypt, ruled out any possibility of it taking custody of the 50 American hostages from the militants occupying the U.S. embassy in Tehran.

"After the flight of the traitor shah, the issue is no longer under consideration in this form — neither taking delivery of the hostages nor taking delivery of the embassy," a spokesman for the council said.

Meanwhile, families of the hostages, who have largely supported President Carter's efforts to free their relatives, are showing signs of impatience with his handling of the 145-day-old crisis.

In the past week, they have organized a formal group, sent the White House a strong letter protesting the prospect of American medical treatment for the deposed shah and invited a Senate critic of Carter to address them.

Leaders of the group stress that it is still in a formative stage and that its primary purpose, at present, is to imbue members with a sense of cohesiveness and mutual support.

Who'll get slippers for Fido?

SOLLEFTEA, Sweden (UPI) — Now they're making shoes for dogs.

Sven Eric Norstrom is the shoemaker, and his shoes, which really look like slipper socks, are for dogs trained to carry out dangerous assignments.

It started with safety regulations for nuclear power plants. Dogs as well as humans are required to wear special protective covering while on the premises of atomic power plants to prevent carrying possible radioactive particles outside.

But the shoes, with the "stocking" part made of plastic and the soles of leather or rubber, are now being distributed to dogs who work on ships where chemicals may spill, or rescue dogs sent into fire zones to look for survivors.

There are two sizes of shoes to choose from.

Norstrom has already sold 300 "double pairs" of the dog shoes.

Dissident sentenced to 5 years

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet court has sentenced human rights activist Malva Landa to five years internal exile on charges that she "knowingly spread false information besmirching the Soviet Union."

Dissident sources said that Miss Landa, 60, looked "very pale" as she was driven to court in Vladimir, 115 kilometres east of Moscow on Wednesday. But before entering the courthouse, they said, she turned to supporters and said, "I love you all."

The sources said the only relative or friend allowed to enter the courtroom was Miss Landa's son. Other supporters were kept as far as 100 metres from the court by uniformed and plainclothes police.

Miss Landa, a retired geologist, had been in detention since March 7.

The charges against her were based on documents found during police searches last December, dissidents said.

These include a 1978 statement in support of dissidents Anatoly Shcharansky, Yuri Orlov and Alexander Ginzburg, a declaration on the 10th anniversary of the 1968 Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia, documents on the Ukrainian branch of the Helsinki human rights group and Miss Landa's personal notes about the case of three Armenians executed for allegedly exploding a bomb in a Moscow subway station in January, 1977.

Dissidents said Miss Landa refused a lawyer and read her own defence speech.

In 1977, Miss Landa was sentenced to exile in Siberia on a charge of property damage after a fire in her own apartment

Notice to B.C. Telephone Company Subscribers.

British Columbia Telephone Company has filed an application with the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission for an increase in its rates. The Company has proposed that the increases come into effect partially on June 1, 1980 and in full on December 17, 1980.

Q. Briefly, what is the application all about?

A. Under the proposed general rate increases, to be effective December 17, 1980, rates for two-party and multi-party residence services and for coin phone use would remain unchanged. Rates for other exchange services would be increased by varying amounts ranging from about 12.5% for individual-line residence service and about 15% for individual-line business service to about 25% for a few specific business services.

Long distance rates on calls within B.C. and between B.C. and Alberta would be restructured. The new rate schedule introduces one-minute rates for most operator-handled calls as well as customer dialed calls and simplifies pricing for easier customer understanding. The long distance changes would yield about 2% more revenue to the Company than existing rates.

Under the proposed interim rate increases, to be effective June 1, 1980, rates for two-party and multi-party residence services and for coin phone use would remain unchanged. Rates for other exchange services would be increased by varying amounts ranging from about 5.3% for individual-line residence service and about 7.3% for individual-line business service and other business services. Long distance rates on calls within B.C. and between B.C. and Alberta would remain unchanged until December 17, 1980.

The interim rates applied from June 1, 1980 to December 16, 1980 would produce approximately $7,800,000 in additional revenues.

In total, the new rates, applied from December 17, 1980, to year end, would produce approximately $1,700,000 in additional revenue. For the full year of 1981, the changes would produce approximately $49,300,000 — which represents an increase of about 6% in the Company's total operating revenues.

Q. How would my rates be affected by the application?

A. Some examples of how rates would be affected by the changes being applied for are set out in this notice. A detailed schedule of the proposed changes, which indicates specifically how rates would be affected in your community, is provided in the application itself.

Q. Why is the Company asking for a rate increase now?

A. The full details of the Company's justification for the increases are set out in its application. By way of summary, the Company has made the following statement:

"B.C. Telephone Company last applied for a general increase in rates in December, 1976. The increases approved were implemented on May 30, 1977 and since then, through operational efficiencies and service growth, the Company has been able to achieve some improvement in its earned return without having to make general price increases, even in the face of rising costs.

In addition to continued operational efficiencies, the Company now finds general price increases are essential to enable it to earn a rate of return investors will judge to be fair in 1981. During 1980 and 1981, the Company is obliged to meet service demands of its customers, to carry out its largest construction programs ever, involving expenditures of $301,000,000 and $350,000,000 in a time of very high interest rates and continuing inflation. In the face of these circumstances, the Company seeks some general rate increases in order that the Company can demonstrate, to the financial community, continued progress towards a fair rate of return necessary to attract external capital."

All of the assertions above, and the application for a general increase in rates to come into effect on December 17, 1980, will be subject to questioning and examination at CRTC central and regional public hearings in which any B.C. Telephone Company subscriber may participate.

Q. Where can I see a copy of the application?

A. Part A of the application, consisting of the Request for Increase in Rates, is available for public inspection during normal business hours at every B.C. Telephone Company business office and at the offices of the CRTC, #1130-701 West Georgia Street, Vancouver, B.C. and Les Terrasses de la Chaudiere, 1 Promenade du Portage, Hull, Quebec. Part B of the application, consisting of Memoranda of Support, is also available for inspection at the CRTC and at the following B.C. Telephone Company business offices: 826 Yates Street, Victoria, B.C., 3777 Kingsway, Burnaby, B.C. and #607 - Fuller Building, 75 Albert Street, Ottawa, Ontario and will be sent to anyone filing a notice of intention to participate at the central hearing.

Q. How can I comment on the part of the application requesting interim rate increases to be effective June 1, 1980?

A. If you have a comment or matter that you feel the Commission should take into account in reviewing the part of the application requesting interim rate increases, you can write directly to the Commission. Opening lead — queen of spades.

The value of a hand is often affected by bids the other players make, and a good part of what is called bidding skill rests on how well one re-evaluates the worth of a hand as the picture keeps changing from one moment to the next.

Here is an example of the guiding principle. The deal occurred in a national team of four championship. Probably most players would pass with the West hand, but Mike Becker, son of this writer, opened the bidding with one club.

North overcalled with one diamond, which East (Andy Bernstein) passed. A double by East would have been for takeout, in their partnership style, and Bernstein therefore passed.

Despite his anemic values, West chose to double for takeout after South's pass of one diamond. East was happy to let the double stand, so he passed, but South was not. Instead, South bid one heart.

Sensing that the enemy might be in trouble, West this time doubled for penalties. After North made an SOS redouble, West also doubled South's one spade bid, which became the final contract.

West's bidding was indeed remarkable. He had opened on minimum values and had then proceeded to double every time it was his turn to call — just as though he had opened a super hand.

Moreover, West found the killing lead of the queen of spades. Declarer ducked in dummy; he naturally assumed that West had the Q-J and East the ace. West then played the ace and another spade.

South eventually went down three to the tune of 500 points. West was exceptionally well rewarded for recognizing that even a minimum opening bid sometimes changes its complexion completely and becomes a powerhouse.

Untapped forests hold promise: experts

By JOHN WORRALL
Christian Science Monitor

NAIROBI — The hot, humid forests of the Amazon and Africa, crawling with life, packed with plants, the soils fertile with "at least 40 per cent of Earth's 5 million to 10 million species," were well represented in the conference room.

Some 80 scientists and tree experts who study the world's tropical forests — representatives from Mexico to Thailand — were here to deplore the unplanned exploitation of forests and to suggest a program for their development and protection.

The host for this unusual "meeting of experts on tropical forests" was the United Nations Environment Program (UNEP).

And some surprising facts about jungle areas were revealed.

Plant productivity from forests surpasses that of any other natural ecosystem and accounts for as much as one-third of all terrestrial plant growth throughout the world each year, Dr. Mustapha Tolba, head of the UNEP, said in opening remarks.

The promise of forests, he said, is their tremendous stores of genetic resources and germ plasm, which have agricultural, medical and industrial uses — stores that can be of great benefit to Third-World countries, which, generally, have larger tracts of forests than developed nations.

Third-World governments, however, long have considered forests to be obstacles to development, Tolba noted.

The conference called for immediate worldwide recognition of the importance of tropical forests; greatly expanded surveys, especially through "remote sensing" techniques; more research to devise ways to use forest ecosystems to their best advantage; application of agroforestry, and protection of at least 10 per cent of the forests to safeguard the majority of species.

There have been encouraging discoveries from new research in jungle areas, and these also were reported at the conference.

Over the last few months, Tolba said, there have been reports that a tree deep in the heart of the Amazon rain forests has a fruit containing several useful industrial materials. One of the materials is so akin to hydrocarbons that it could serve as a substitute for diesel oil.

Another positive development, Tolba said, is the increased consumption of the "winged bean," which finally is catching hold outside of Southeast Asia. This year, the protein-rich vegetable is being grown in 50 countries throughout the tropics.

Poverty forces Haitian exodus

MIAMI (AP) — Haitian refugees, fleeing across shark-infested waters in an exodus from poverty, are scrambling ashore in Florida in record numbers, beaching their rickety boats along the wealthy Gold Coast from Key Biscayne to Hollywood.

The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service said 140 more men, women and children arrived this week.

The new arrivals brought the total to an estimated 1,250 Haitians known to have landed here this month, said William Metcalf, assistant district director for investigations of the immigration service. The previous high was 637 in October, 1979.

An estimated 12,000 Haitians are believed to be in South Florida, brought by makeshift vessels.

No one knows how many Haitians have died in the attempt to reach Florida. However, five children and a young mother drowned 450 metres off West Palm Beach last August, and several others drowned this winter off Fort Lauderdale on a trip from the Bahamas to Florida.

Though many of the Haitians attempt to claim political asylum, federal agents suspect they simply are fleeing the poverty of their Caribbean island homeland.

The average Haitian earned $212 in 1978.

Efforts to expel them have been stalled, however, by suits claiming the government is failing to give the refugees due process before forcing them to leave. In a federal suit to block deportation, a witness identified as a former member of the Haitian secret police said refugees face severe punishment when they return home.

No-party election under fire

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (UPI) — Former Ugandan President Milton Obote lashed out at Ugandan President Godfrey Binaisa Wednesday for announcing that no political parties will take part in Uganda's coming elections.

Obote threatened to return quickly to Uganda from his long exile in Tanzania if Binaisa follows through with his plan.

Obote, who was ousted as Ugandan leader by Idi Amin in 1971 and is still in exile a year after Amin's overthrow by invading Tanzanian troops, said Binaisa's plan to abolish political parties would lead to "big trouble" in Uganda.

He said the Uganda National Liberation Front, which Binaisa said will be the only party in the elections, is actually a coalition of 23 organizations opposed to Amin and that Binaisa has no authority to abolish those organizations.

Obote said the Ugandan elections should be held under the auspices of the Liberation Front, but each party must be able to maintain its identity.

"Binaisa cannot wish unity," he said. "Unity has got to be brought about by positive action. You can ban those parties today, but they will reappear. That's why I say he is tring to promote underground politics."

Obote said he favors the continuation of the UNLF as a grouping of parties until such time as the identities of the individual parties eventually fade away.

Obote said that because of Binaisa's announcement, "I now want to return to Uganda in the very near future."

Regal raise arouses right royal rage

LONDON (AP) — The Royal Family, under increasing public scrutiny by inflation-plagued citizens, was under fire again today after the Conservative government gave it a £538,000 ($1.4-million) pay rise and stung just about everyone else with an austerity budget.

"Good day for the royals," said the mass-circulation Daily Mirror in a front-page story. "Mean day for the rest."

Angry labor MPs, including royalty-basher Willie Hamilton from Scotland, planned to raise a storm in the House of Commons over what Labor MP Bob Cryer from working class Yorkshire emotionally branded "a kick in the teeth for the ill and the unemployed."

Cryer was the most bitter about a 30-per-cent pay increase for Princess Anne, who got £85,000 ($221,000) of the taxpayers' money in the Civil List, the annual state allowance for British royals to maintain their palaces and perform public duties.

A Buckingham Palace spokesman said 29-year-old Anne got the 30-per-cent rise because she overspent her allowance last year by "several thousand pounds" and has had to borrow from a bank to pay her debts.

She ran into the red maintaining the £500,000 ($1.3-million) Gloucestershire estate, Gatcombe Park, her mother bought for her as a wedding present when she married cavalry Capt. Mark Phillips four years ago.

But, the royal spokesman noted, she'll have to work for her money by performing more official duties.

Altogether, the Royal Family will get £3.317 million ($8.62 million) this year, a 19-per-cent increase over last year and in line with Britain's current rate of inflation.

The Queen herself gets a raise of £538,000 ($1.39 million) to take her allowance to £2.72 million ($7.07 million).

Most of this goes on running Buckingham Palace, her castles and travelling with the royal retinue of officials and aides.

However, palace press secretary Michael Shea stressed that the Queen will fork out more of her own personal fortune this year to help out — £248,000 ($644,000), £36,000 ($93,600) more than last year.

Shea said the monarch isn't hiring palace staff these days to save money and "in the coming year we shall be making more economies."

That isn't likely to mean much to hard-up Britons, suffering from a chronic economic malaise and tough budget efforts to cure it.

The chancellor of the exchequer, Sir Geoffrey Howe, tightened the belt a little more Wednesday with "inescapable" tough policies, slashing state spending and raising taxes on drinks, cigarettes and gasoline in another bid to brake Britain's decline.

Labor leaders slammed the budget, furious with increases in charges for the state-run National Health Service, cuts in social security and taxing sickness benefits.

Labor Leader James Callaghan branded it "the most socially divisive budget since 1931."

Len Murray, general secretary of the Trades Union Congress, said it will plunge this country "back into the '30s with a vengeance."

New nurse strike looms

A tentative contract agreement has been reached for registered nurses at 113 general hospitals in B.C. but trouble is brewing for 2,700 other nurses.

Announcement of the tentative pact came Wednesday from the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. and Health Labor Relations Association.

Voting on the agreement will take place over the next five weeks.

The contract calls for a 44-per-cent increase in nurses' salaries over 27 months and a five-per-cent increase in benefits.

The nurses would get a lump sum payment of $600, plus five wage increases over the term of the contract.

It increases the rate of a first-year nurse to $1,900 a month from $1,305. Top-level supervisory pay increases to $2,745 a month from $1,924.

The five increases are: $145 a month from Jan. 1, 12 per cent on May 1, $76 a month on Jan. 1, 1981, eight per cent Aug. 1, 1981, and 3.49 per cent Jan. 1, 1982.

But the same day RNABC was announcing this agreement, it served seven-day strike notice for 2,700 community and psychiatric nurses.

Victoria-area health units are not affected by this dispute.

The nurses' contract expired Dec. 31, 1979, and the major issue is wages.

The government's bargaining agency, the Government Employee Relations Bureau, has proposed a three-year-agreement with an eight-per-cent increase each year.

The nurses want a 27-month contract with a compounded salary increase of 39 per cent.

Mediator Clarke Gilmour was involved in the dispute and has been asked to withdraw by RNABC.

No strike action is possible until he reports to the labor minister and the minister informs both parties of this action.

The nurses voted Dec. 18 by a 91-per-cent margin to go on strike to back up their demands.

The Labor Code states that a strike vote is only operative for 90 days and that time limit expired.

However, both parties involved in the dispute agreed to an extension of the deadline.

RNABC was given a 98-per-cent strike mandate by the 12,500 RNs who now have a tentative agreement.

St. Helens cleared to pop her peak

SPIRIT LAKE, Wash. (UPI) — More earthquakes shook dormant volcano Mount St. Helens today as the last few residents who live on the slopes of the Southwest Washington mountain evacuated their homes.

Scientists have warned that Mount St. Helens, which last erupted in 1857, may be building toward another eruption that could come within a few days.

The last of approximately 60 year-round residents of the Spirit Lake area on the volcano's north side moved out after being warned of the danger.

Gifford-Pinchot National Forest officials in Vancouver, Wash., said Forest Service personnel working in the Mount St. Helens area were removed during the night, but returned to work during the daytime hours.

On Wednesday sheriff's deputies blocked off the only major highway to the snow-covered, 9,677-foot mountain 100 miles south of Seattle.

All private aircraft were banned from flying over the 9,766-foot peak because federal officials said the airspace was becoming congested with sightseers.

"That thing erupts every 60 to 100 years consistently," said Dr. Leonard Palmer, geology professor at Portland State University. "We haven't had an eruption for more than 100 years.

"You'd have to have your head in the sand to not be worried."

A rapid-fire series of earthquakes began last Thursday and reached a one-a-minute peak Tuesday night before diminishing to about one per hour Wednesday.

Scientists believe the biggest threat from an eruption at Mount St. Helens would not be from lava, but from mudflows roaring down the mountain into three hydroelectric reservoirs on the Lewis River just south of the peak.

That could cause massive flooding in the entire river valley and possibly swell the Columbia River, threatening the city of Portland about 50 miles away.

The few witnesses to the mountain's 1857 eruption said great clouds of volcanic material were spewed into the sky. Ash a half-inch deep fell at The Dalles, Ore., 65 miles away.

Zero growth, higher prices grim forecast

OTTAWA (CP) — The economy is not expected to grow at all this year, the Conference Board in Canada said Wednesday in its latest and most pessimistic outlook for 1980.

The board, an Ottawa-based business research group, had earlier forecast growth of 0.7 per cent, but because of worsening world economic conditions it now expects zero growth.

Furthermore, the board said, "this year of no growth will be accompanied by continuing high rates of inflation."

It estimates consumer prices will rise by 9.7 per cent compared with inflation of 9.1 per cent last year.

Unemployment is also expected to worsen to 7.8 per cent from 7.5 per cent, the board said in its quarterly forecast.

Despite a slowdown in export sales, the current account deficit is expected to rise only slightly to $5.3 billion because imports are expected to slow as well. The current account is a measure of Canada's trade in goods, services, and travel with other countries.

The board estimates the federal deficit will rise to $12.4 billion this year, slightly higher than in 1979, because continued inflation and slow growth will result in federal revenue rising less quickly than expenditures.

The board's forecast assumes no change in government policy, thus sidestepping the effects of anticipated higher oil prices and a federal budget. As a result, the board warns its inflation forecast may be too low.

Consumer spending, after adjusting for inflation, is expected to grow by 1.7 per cent in 1980, reflecting the erosion of real purchasing power because of price increases.

Housing starts of only 163,000 units — the lowest since 1968 — have been estimated as demand will be weak in light of high interest rates and consumers having less money available for major spending activities.

Business investment — the main source of economic strength in 1979 — will still be the most positive element for the economy.

The board warns that Canadian interest rates will continue to parallel those in the U.S. because of the continued high current account deficit and government concern about a decline in the value of the dollar.

But interest rates could peak during the summer and then decline by the end of 1980 with short-term rates — of up to one year — likely to fall more quickly than long-term rates.

Bank rate 15.49%

Times News Services

The Bank of Canada lending rate rose by 0.70 per cent to a record 15.49 per cent today as the Toronto and New York stock markets plunged.

Canada's chartered banks are expected to follow suit with a new round of interest hikes in the next few days.

The Toronto stock market took a steep dive in mid-session trading with the Toronto Stock Exchange 300 index off 67.61 points to 1730.55.

In New York, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which closed Wednesday at its lowest level in almost two years, lost another 7.34 to 754.78 by noon EST.

The Bank of Canada, raising the rate at which it lends money to the nation's financial institutions for a third consecutive week, was continuing its new policy of letting its lending rates float 0.25 per cent above the average yield of 91-day treasury bills.

Two weeks ago — when it was pegged — the Bank of Canada's lending rate stood at 14 per cent.

In New York, silver plummeted to $10 an ounce — then improved to $12 — in trading in on rumors that billionaire Hunt Brothers of Dallas threatened to liquidate their huge silver holdings if they could not

Visit the stars

Sally Field is rated as the hot favorite to win the Oscar for best actress on April 14.

Her performance as Norma Rae, a young woman who gets involved in the tension-filled union struggles of a southern plant, has been widely hailed.

New York movie writers called it the best performance of the year.

But predicting Academy Award winners can be a difficult chore.

For example, last year Jill Clayburgh was regarded by the same New York writers as a shoo-in for the best actress award but Academy voters in Los Angeles surprised them by picking Jane Fonda.

Fonda and Clayburgh are back again this year, along with Marsha Mason and Bette Midler.

The Victoria Times and VI*90 are sponsoring a Visit the Stars contest, giving readers a chance to win a trip for two to Hollywood if they can correctly predict the Academy Awards for best actress, best actor and best movie.

The official entry form, along with the full list of rules, is in an advertisement on page 37 today.

'I pray he doesn't harm someone'

By MIKE HUGHES

The mother of a 15-year-old boy whose sentence at a B.C. juvenile detention centre ends Friday fears for her son's future.

"I'll give him a week and he'll be right back in," she said in an interview today.

"I just hope and pray he doesn't harm someone before he's back."

Her son has a drug problem and was sentenced to the centre for being involved in a purse snatching.

He's spent time in receiving homes, remand homes and other facilities and critics of the system say his case is typical of the way juveniles are shuffled about.

They spend so much time in detention centres that they begin to look on them as home.

The 15-year-old is being tested now for possible brain damage from LSD use and the dilemma facing the court Friday is simple: Where does he go from here?

There are no mental health resources for youngsters and if he stays in the community the problem is how to keep him off drugs?

His case came up Wednesday in Victoria's family court along with two others and Judge Lawrence Brahan gave the boy's probation officer until Friday to come up with alternatives.

If none is available, he will be released and become a ward of the superintendent of child welfare.

That probably means a foster home and his mother fears he won't last long there.

"He needs help. He needs some one-on-one therapy and he's not getting it," she said.

"If they put him in a foster home, he's going to blow it."

She says her son is typical of problem kids who are pushed from one person to another.

Professional people try to help but they don't seem to have any answers either, she said.

"I don't see the solution. If it is brought to the public's attention, they will just say they are a bunch of bad kids — the public really doesn't care."

Victoria Ald. Gretchen Brewin who was in family court when the boy appeared, said it's time the community became more

Victoria's 'jetfoil age' will dawn on May 15

Victoria will enter the jetfoil age on May 15 when the Flying Princess starts making two trips daily between the city and Seattle.

Operation Jetfoil chairman Cedric Steele said Wednesday the B.C. Development Corporation has forwarded a deposit of $50,000 in U.S. funds to Boeing of Seattle to seal a six-month lease for the vessel.

Total cost of the lease is $3.62 million U.S., including salaries for the crew, $1 million for fuel, and charges for parts and servicing.

If there is a deficit at the end of six months, it will be paid by BCDC.

If there is a surplus, about 15 per cent of it would go to BCDC while the remainder would go to the Flying Princess Transportation Corporation, a non-profit society to be formed by Operation Jetfoil.

Proposals are being considered for the first voyage of the Flying Princess early in the morning of May 15.

An application will be made for a bar licence for the vessel.

The jetfoil will dock in Seattle overnight for servicing. It will make its first trip to Victoria in the morning.

It travels at 80 km/h and arrives in Victoria in less than two hours, compared with more than four hours for the Queen of Prince Rupert.

The jetfoil carries 250 passengers on a reservation basis while the Rupert carries 800.

Between mid-May and July 1, with the jetfoil making two trips and the Rupert one, the total passenger capacity out of Seattle will be 1,300, or 500 less than the Princess Marguerite which carried 1,800.

However, in the peak summer months there will be two trips by the Rupert and three by the jetfoil, for a total passenger capacity of 2,350.

Steele said he will approach eight people this week to see if they are interested in joining the board of the Flying Princess Transportation Corporation.

"I would like to step out of this myself, if possible, because I have several other projects I would like to pursue."

Steele, who is president of the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce, said the jetfoil service was launched as a community venture, with the chamber acting only as catalyst to get negotiations started.

The fare on the Flying Princess will be $20 or $25 in U.S. funds for a one-way ticket. A special reduced rate may be available for the round trip.

Reduced rates may also be considered for children and for people travelling in groups.

By comparison the rate on the Marguerite was $13 one way, $21 return, in U.S. funds, but a small increase is in the works.

The FPT Corporation will try to hire an expert group to operate the jetfoil service on its behalf.

Steele said the logical choice is the B.C. Steamship Co., the government agency running the Rupert. Talks are already under way.

"We hope to merge the schedule of the jetfoil and the Queen of Prince Rupert," Steele said. "It makes sense for the B.C. Steamship Co. to be handling both vessels. We might be able to sell a package with a ride on the jetfoil one way and on the Rupert coming back."

At the end of six months, the FPTC will have the option to purchase the Flying Princess for $8.5 million U.S. or about $10 million in current Canadian dollars.

The Flying Princess is a two-year-old demonstrator model. New jetfoils cost more than $11 million in U.S. funds.

Steele said he hoped the FPTC will decide to buy the jetfoil and order two or three more.

"I view this as just the beginning of a new transportation system for Vancouver Island."

He said a Victoria-based company could operate jetfoils linking Seattle, Victoria, Vancouver and Nanaimo.

"We are moving into a new age in transportation and jetfoils could be the answer."

The jetfoil operates like a giant water ski, skimming along on top of the water. It has water jet propulsion and is stabilized by a submerged foil.

It can operate in waves up to three metres high.

Freight pressure minimal on ferries despite fears

Despite near-panic reactions to news of the strike-bound CP marine freight service to Vancouver, a B.C. Ferries spokesman said today pressure on the system has so far been only minimal.

The spokesman said today although a half-dozen semi-trailer rigs and two other commercial trucks left behind at Horseshoe Bay on the first sailing this morning, there have been no problems elsewhere.

First sailing loads on the Horseshoe Bay-Departure Bay and Tsawwassen-Swartz Bay routes were heavier than usual but by mid-morning the crunch was over.

Despite the lack of overloads, the B.C. Ferry Corp. decided Wednesday night to add one extra sailing of the truck ferry Queen of Alberni each day to provide additional capacity for truck drivers who ususally use the strike-bound CP service.

The agreement was reached at a meeting between Transport Minister Alex Fraser and ferry corporation directors.

The B.C. Motor Transport Association, which met with Fraser on Tuesday to discuss the problem, had called for continuous overnight sailings of the ferry.

The one extra sailing between Tsawwassen and Swartz Bay will be on a drop-trailer rather than truck-and-trailer basis to accomodate more loads.

The ferry will be able to carry 54 trailers on the sailing.

"It will be the companies' responsibility to handle all the loading and unloading," Fraser said.

He said there won't be any space problem at the Tsawwassen terminal and hopefully there will not be any problem at Swartz Bay.

The minister also said the corporation will call on additional ships if required.

The ferry corporation normally handles about 50 per cent of the truck trailers moving between the mainland and Vancouver Island and the extra sailing on the Queen of Alberni will take up about 15 to 20 per cent of the slack caused by the CP strike, he said.

"We're not trying to strive to pick up everything CP was hauling. We're always going to be behind — that's for sure."

Commodities going to Vancouver Island include food, general merchandise, coal, sulphur, liquefied propane gas, machinery and paper products.

The extra load on B.C. Ferries followed the strike Monday of 60 members of the Seafarers International Union, who want wage parity with workers in the West Coast tugboat industry.

The CP workers want a $1.08-an-hour wage increase on a base rate of $8.49 an hour while CP has offered a 74-cents-an-hour increase.

Labor Minister Jack Heinrich had asked the federal government to appoint a conciliator to resolve the dispute.

raise a loan with major foreign banks.

Nelson Bunker Hunt and W. Herbert Hunt, who reportedly hold the largest hoard of silver in the nation, have seen their holdings drop in value from $50 an ounce to just over $15 at the close in New York Wednesday.

Bunker Hunt stunned the market Wednesday when he announced in Paris he had formed an investment company with wealthy Arab interests to market silver-backed interest-bearing certificates.

As both gold and silver prices slumped, the U.S. dollar hit a four-year high against the Italian lira and a 10-month peak against the West German mark on world financial markets today.

The two-year low on the New York stock market in light trading Wednesday was believed caused by the prospect of even-higher U.S.interest rates and government-fueled inflation fears.

The Federal Reserve Board, in settling accounts with member banks, let short-term rates soar to 22 per cent.

Bullion prices fell sharply this morning and were still well below Wednesday's levels even after a slight recovery later in the day.

By mid-afternoon gold was selling in London and Zurich for $490.50 an ounce, down from $505.50 and $504.50 respectively late Wednesday.

Silver, which fell to $13.75 an ounce early in the day, traded in London at $16, down $1.50 from Wednesday.

"It's all part of the big clearout, with holders tired of holding on to metal and waiting for the big rise, especially in view of the heavy cost due to high interest rates," said one London dealer.

Meanwhile, the U.S. dollar continued to benefit from investment-attracting American interest rates.

The Canadian dollar was up ¼ at 84.25 cents U.S. in morning trading in New York.

The Dow Jones industrial average finished Wednesday with a loss of 5.71 points to 762.12, the lowest level since it finished at 755.37 on April 4, 1978.

The closely watched barometer has fallen 141.72 points since hitting a 1980 high of 903 on Feb. 13. This plunge rivaled the bear-market dive of August 1974 when the Dow dropped 150 points.

In Toronto, the stock market was at the lowest point the market has fallen to this year and was just fractionally higher than the level it closed at last Dec. 12.

Food airlifted

NORTH SYDNEY, N.S. (UPC) — CN Marine ordered an emergency airlift of food today, conceding that with no relief from the wind it will take "a little while yet" to free two ferries trapped for four days in 17-foot thick ice.

The Marine Atlantica with 142 passengers and 69 crewmen aboard, the car ferry Frederick Carter with about 50 crewmen and the freighter Jopa-f have been held since Sunday in a huge ice field less than 10 miles from Sydney harbor.

Two Coast Guard icebreakers, the huge Louis St. Laurent and the smaller Labrador, also remained helplessly trapped.

The Labrador, however, managed to pump 50 to 75 tons of fresh water aboard the Marine Athaltnica today and Coast Guard and Armed Forces helicopters were called in to airlift food and other provisions to the passenger ferry.

The 142 passengers accepted the latest setback in good humor.

Problem kids shuffled off

aware of what is going on.

"We do things to kids which we would never do to adults," Brewin said.

She said the various government ministries involved also have to show more concern and spend more money on solutions to the problems.

Brewin, Victoria council's representative on the Family Court Committee, said her day in court has left her upset about the way the juveniles are shuffled about within the justice system.

There appears to be a lack of facilities to deal with the juveniles, she said, as well, at times, a lack of concern by those responsible for them.

Brewin said another boy whose case came up Wednesday has been "all over the map," spending nine months in one facility or another.

He was seven months in the Willingdon juvenile detention centre in Burnaby and about two weeks ago, was sent over to the Juvenile Detention Centre at 1125 Pembroke.

But there was no information sent with the boy and no assistance given on what should be done with him.

"The idea is not to blame anyone in particular for the current situation but for people to start getting their heads together and doing something about why these kids are being shuffled around."

Right now, she said the system is not responding properly to the problems involved in dealing with juvenile offenders and doesn't seem to know how to respond.

There are some facilities available but in some cases they are overcrowded or inadequate for dealing with certain youngsters.

The juvenile centre here is an example, Brewin said.

There are now 19 juveniles being held there and the maximum is said to be 20 although last Christmas there were as many as 30 youngsters crammed in.

civic affairs

In four days (April Fool's Day, appropriately) you become the proud owner of a one-fourth share in the Victoria bus system. What's going to happen?

Next Tuesday morning, the fare will still be 50 cents and the same drivers will be operating the buses.

Most of the initial changes will be on paper, but in a few months or a year it could be a very different transit system.

At midnight Monday ownership of B.C. Hydro's fleet of buses and all of the employees of the Crown corporation's transit division will transfer to a new creature called the Metro Transit Operating Co. Its job in the new scheme of things will be to provide the supervisors, drivers and mechanics to keep the fleet of several hundred vehicles on the road in Greater Victoria and Vancouver.

Despite its important role, the company is destined for a low profile. Its name will never appear on the buses it operates and MTO will never become a catchy acronym in the headlines. It's strictly an operating company with no responsibiliy for planning changes or innovations, except the day to day juggling necessary to keep to the schedule.

That will be the role of the Urban Transit Authority, the quasi-independent agency under the ministry of municipal affairs, and the regional districts of Victoria and Vancouver.

The UTA was established by the government as a mechanism to pay the 75 per cent provincial share of the transit deficit, and to extend bus service to other parts of B.C.

It's a planning body, a function which overlaps the Vancouver and Capital regional districts. In the smaller communities of B.C. with buses — Nanaimo and Penticton for example — the UTA arranges everything. Here and in Vancouver, there's a certain amount of confusion over responsibilities and jurisdictional divisions between the regional transit planners and the UTA transit planners.

Starting next week, the Capital Regional District and the Greater Vancouver Regional District have to pay the other 25 per cent of the cost not covered by fares. (The formula will change over five years to 60-40.) For that share of the bill, they get to decide what changes and improvements will be made in the bus system, although if the recent past is any indication, the UTA will skillfully "guide" the regional directors through uncertain ground.

The most obvious change will be an increase in electricity bills. Your next bimonthly bill is going to include a $2 surcharge to meet the Capital Regional District's estimated $2 million share of the local transit red ink, more if you own a business within the CRD.

Another visible change will be the new color scheme of the buses. One morning this spring regular riders out in Langford will shuffle forward in the queue and board their bus, newly painted in bright orange. It's the same color that now runs down the sides of Hydro's buses in a narrow stripe, but the UTA design is going to be visible from half a mile. There will be a half-metre wide stripe running down the sides of the bus from a solid orange front end.

Gradually, all buses will be repainted. Transit patrons on the Saanich Peninsula and in the Western Community will be the first to see it because their vehicles need repainting soon.

Their buses were bought six years ago in the eastern U.S. during the NDP government's big push to expand transit. The logo "New Jersey Tours" is starting to show up beneath the peeling paint.

Another highly visible change will probably be the death of the city's Freewheeler bus, the mid-day fare-free zone in downtown Victoria.

Unless the city votes more money to keep it going, the new transit paymasters on the CRD are going to let the six-month experiment (its $42,000 cost was financed equally by the UTA and the city) expire at 3 p.m. Monday.

The planners think a pass system would be better, either a special downtown ticket which merchants and businesses could sell at subsidized rates to lure shoppers and employees out of their cars or a daily or monthly pass good on the entire bus system.

Myths, facts to be given on arthritis at lecture

A lecture on the myths and facts of common arthritis disorders will be held April 3 at 8 p.m. in the YM-YWCA auditorium, 880 Courtney.

Dr. Charles Y. Brown, consultant in rheumatic diseases, will speak and there will be a quesion period for the audience.

The lecture is the last of this year's series of Info/Health lectures sponsored by the Victoria Medical Society and the Y.

The mortgage company is demanding $5,000 from Grace Juch — immediately

Singing the Mortgage Blues

By PAUL MINVIELLE

The first mortgage on Grace Juch's strata title home isn't due for a couple of years yet, but she's so discouraged with the way mortgage interest rates are going she's ready to say: "Take it now."

The former nurse's aide is demoralized because her second mortgage has fallen due and the company that holds it wants $5,000 — now.

After seeing her two boys — Paul, 12 and Stephen, 11 — off to school this morning, the 58-year-old Mrs. Juch (pronounced Yooke) sat in her nicely furnished living room and related the events that prompted her decision to prepare to give up her strata-title duplex.

What's given her a glimmer of hope is the crusade of Saanich hairdresser Ena Curran, 4171 Borden, who is supporting the cause of Viv Woolford of Mississauga, Ont.

Since a Times story about her, Curran has been deluged with calls and mail from people who are sinking under ever-greater mortgage payments.

Grace Juch is one of those victims.

There was a time when things were going well for the Juch family.

They had six kids, a boat and a trailer and they did a lot of camping.

"We haven't got anything like that any more," she said.

Her husband's Armed Forces salary was adequate to live on, even after the couple split up.

Her husband's support payments and her $1,000-a-month job as a nurses' aide enabled her to buy the three-bedroom house at 3034 Glen Lake Road in Langford for $51,900 three years ago.

Her payments on the 10¼-per-cent mortgage were $435, including taxes.

There was also a second mortgage of $4,725 at 12 per cent, another $50 a month.

Then she was injured and forced to quit her job.

She collected compensation for a time, as well as unemployment insurance. Canada Manpower paid to retrain her and she emerged a trained bookkeeper — right into a labor market top-heavy with trained bookkeepers.

Then her husband retired. His separation allowance paid some of the couple's old bills, but his help to the family dropped to half the mortgage payment, or about $220.

So Mrs. Juch just survived as best she could.

It was last July when she noticed her second mortgage cheque hadn't gone through her bank.

Curious, she made some phone calls and was told the holder of the mortgage, Unicon Homes of Victoria, had gone bankrupt.

It wasn't until later she learned that Price, Waterhouse and Co. was handling the affairs of the bankrupt firm.

She asked where she should send her cheques. No one seemed to know but she was told someone would get back to her.

No one ever called.

The mortgage fell due Jan. 1, 1980. Mrs. Juch phoned Jan. 16, but no one could tell her anything.

When she finally did hear from the company, she was told she owed $4,901.76.

Although there was no explanation as to how Price, Waterhouse had arrived at that figure, Juch's lawyer figured the company was entitled to it.

Mrs. Juch disagreed, saying some of the extra cost was the company's fault.

Juch checked to see if the second mortgage amount could be tacked on to her first.

She was told the mortgages could be combined into a new mortgage at 15¾ per cent.

Mrs. Juch would have to pay legal fees and all costs of the new mortgage.

"It was just like a new application," she said.

The monthly payment would go from $435 to $650.

"I didn't even qualify for it," Juch said.

As she began to think about the future, she realized that when her first mortgage comes due in two years, she'll probably have to give up the house.

"If I don't qualify for it now at 15¾ per cent, what's it going to be like two years from now?"

"There comes a time when you have to dig in your heels," Juch said.

There was still $2,000 left from her husband's separation allowance.

She offered it to Price, Waterhouse to pay out the second mortgage.

Her lawyer doesn't think they'll go for it.

"If they don't," Juch declared, "they can take the house — right now."

Suspect held in smash-grab

A 20-year-old man is to appear in court charged with a smash-and-grab incident in which $1,863 worth of jewelry was taken from a Fort Street display window early today.

Police said a nearby resident heard the sound of breaking glass and saw a man reach in and take something from Stadacona Jewellery Shoppe, 1516 Fort, then run west to a sidestreet.

Police stopped the suspect near 1019 Pemberton and recovered rings valued at $447.

But other items worth $1,416 are still missing.

Earlier, police received reports of two daylight burglaries involving the theft of about $2,250 worth of gold, silver and coins from two houses on Mt. Stephen.

Police said a thief hit the home of Robert McMillan, 2695 Capital Heights, by entering through a rear door.

Stolen were a gold charm bracelet valued at between $2,500 and $3,000, a $300 gold watch, a $100 gold wedding band and $10-$15 worth of silver coins.

In the second theft at the nearby home of Noreen Falconberg, 12 Hayward Heights, a patio door screened by shrubbery was forced open and a $75 gold pendant, a silver cross and chain valued at $50, and a gold watch of undetermined value were taken.

Two killed near Duncan

Two persons were killed when a car hit a tree Wednesday night seven kilometers south of Duncan.

An RCMP spokesman said the driver and one passenger died in the Koksilah Road crash.

Another passenger received minor injuries and was taken to Cowichan District Hospital.

Names are being withheld until families have been notified.

Average marks for free buses

By NORMAN GIDNEY

The downtown Freewheeler bus experiment due to expire Monday gets only average marks in an evaluation study carried out by the Urban Transit Authority.

Its survey of B.C. Hydro officials, downtown Victoria merchants and shoppers who parked in civic parkades found a lack of awareness of the free-fare zone, but a potential for some form of free transit.

Hydro, which operated the demonstration service at a cost of $42,000 over the last six months for the UTA and the city, recommends that it be scrapped.

Bus drivers found that the 22-square block free zone confused riders, especially the elderly, and delayed the schedule.

From 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. all buses travelling through the downtown sector bounded by Blanshard, Herald, Wharf and Belleville are free. It was designed to ease traffic congestion in the core area by providing an alternative means of getting around.

But anyone who boards here and rides outside must exit by the front door and pay the fare.

"This has been confusing and unsettling to individuals accustomed to paying a fare on boarding a bus and has been a constant source of complaint to B.C. Hydro transit," says the UTA report.

"Further, at the destination point patrons cannot leave by the rear door which has also become an irritant. Finally transit patrons have also appeared confused over the time the program is in effect and forget the start and finish times which can lead to confusion and misunderstandings with transit operators."

Downtown merchants thought there wasn't enough promotion of the Freewheeler zone, but 82 per cent want it continued. Twenty-eight per cent saw an increase in business activity which they attributed to the scheme.

Sixty per cent said their staff used the Freewheeler bus, but only six per cent did so daily. Twenty-eight per cent rode once a week, while 59 per cent said "occasionally."

The UTA says the results from merchants indicated a favorable response to free downtown transit. Questionnaires distributed in late February to shoppers at city parkades in mid-day brought similar results.

Eighty-three per cent were aware of the Freewheeler. Twenty-two per cent had used the bus — four per cent daily and another four per cent several times a week. Ten per cent said they used it once a week and 12 per cent once a month.

Ten per cent of the shoppers said it was an incentive to come downtown and 17 per cent said it made it easier to get around (versus 83 per cent who said it made no difference).

The UTA study says the results from shoppers indicate a potential for greater use, given better promotion of a free transit plan.

It conludes that the complaints and survey results suggest limitations to the present scheme and poses alternatives:

— A fare-free shuttle bus (which the city paid for two years ago) or with a nominal fare, such as 10 cents.

— A downtown transit pass, either issued free by parkades and merchants, or sold by bus drivers and stores.

The UTA encourages the second option.

RJH backs doctors on obstetric unit

By BRENDA DALGLISH

Royal Jubilee Hospital directors couldn't say enough good things Wednesday night about a doctors' committee fighting for the right of the hospital to keep its obstetric unit.

Four members of the committee, including chairman Dr. Scott Wallace, spoke to the board which agreed to offer its full support.

Wallace said the committee was formed after a unanimous vote of members of the active medical staff of the hospital.

The committee plans to fight the Capital Region District's health planning commission's proposal to centralize all obstetric facilities — except for emergency cases which will be handled at any hospital — at the new Victoria General Hospital on Helmcken Road.

The RJH board earlier tried unsuccessfully to get the health commission to change its plan and Wallace said he doubts there is much more it could do.

Wallace said the doctors are prepared to spend their own money on a campaign which will include newspaper advertising and possibly radio and television advertising.

In addition, the seven-member committee has offered to speak to interested groups about the subject.

"We're in this in a very serious way and we're not going to give it up until this stupid decision is reversed," Wallace told the board.

Pressure from the public, he said, may be what's needed to persuade the commission.

Wallace said the doctors' objections are based on concern that obstetrics is being treated as a highly specialized field of medicine, like cardiac surgery, renal dialysis or burns treatment.

But in fact, he said, obstetrics is a natural function that in the vast majority of cases doesn't need a great deal of equipment.

WALLACE
. . . all-out campaign

Wallace pointed to the two extremes of opinion that seem to be developing in obstetric theory: one favors more home births while the other suggests more specialized care.

"Some experts have gone so far as to say every mother should be monitored and every baby should have a terminal screwed into its skull," said Wallace.

But, he said, one important factor is the need for the doctor to be present at certain times to prevent or handle problems that can develop.

Because of the distance of the new hospital from most doctor's offices, Wallace said, centralizing the obstetrics facility might cause more harm than good.

He said he found a number of contradictory decisions while researching the matter.

"If I care to give all my energy to this and document their past actions I think their performance will be shown to be abysmal," he said.

Wallace claimed centralizing the service will not provide better care or be cost-efficient.

Regal raise arouses right royal rage

LONDON (AP) — The Royal Family, under increasing public scrutiny by inflation-plagued citizens, was under fire again today after the Conservative government gave it a £538,000 ($1.4-million) pay rise and stung just about everyone else with an austerity budget.

"Good day for the royals," said the mass-circulation Daily Mirror in a front-page story. "Mean day for the rest."

Angry labor MPs, including royalty-basher Willie Hamilton from Scotland, planned to raise a storm in the House of Commons over what Labor MP Bob Cryer from working-class Yorkshire emotionally branded "a kick in the teeth for the ill and the unemployed."

Cryer was the most bitter about a 30-per-cent pay increase for Princess Anne, who got £85,000 ($221,000) of the taxpayers' money in the Civil List, the annual state allowance for British royals to maintain their palaces and perform public duties.

A Buckingham Palace spokesman said 29-year-old Anne got the 30-per-cent rise because she overspent her allowance last year by "several thousand pounds" and has had to borrow from a bank to pay her debts.

She ran into the red maintaining the £500,000 ($1.3-million) Gloucestershire estate, Gatcombe Park, her mother bought for her as a wedding present when she married cavalry Capt. Mark Phillips four years ago.

But, the royal spokesman noted, she'll have to work for her money by performing more official duties.

Altogether, the Royal Family will get £3.317 million ($8.62 million) this year, a 19-per-cent increase over last year and in line with Britain's current rate of inflation.

The Queen herself gets a raise of £538,000 ($1.39 million) to take her allowance to £2.72 million ($7.07 million).

Most of this goes on running Buckingham Palace, her castles and travelling with the royal retinue of officials and aides.

However, palace press secretary Michael Shea stressed that the Queen will fork out more of her own personal fortune this year to help out — £248,000 ($644,000), £36,000 ($93,600) more than last year.

Shea said the monarch isn't hiring palace staff these days to save money and "in the coming year we shall be making more economies."

That isn't likely to mean much to hard-up Britons, suffering from a chronic economic malaise and tough budget efforts to cure it.

The chancellor of the exchequer, Sir Geoffrey Howe, tightened the belt a little more Wednesday with "inescapable" tough policies, slashing state spending and raising taxes on drinks, cigarettes and gasoline in another bid to brake Britain's decline.

Labor leaders slammed the budget, furious with increases in charges for the state-run National Health Service, cuts in social security and taxing sickness benefits.

Labor Leader James Callaghan branded it "the most socially divisive budget since 1931."

Len Murray, general secretary of the Trades Union Congress, said it will plunge this country "back into the '30s with a vengeance."

New nurse strike looms

A tentative contract agreement has been reached for registered nurses at 113 general hospitals in B.C. but trouble is brewing for 2,700 other nurses.

Announcement of the tentative pact came Wednesday from the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. and Health Labor Relations Association.

Voting on the agreement will take place over the next five weeks.

The contract calls for a 44-per-cent increase in nurses' salaries over 27 months and a five-per-cent increase in benefits.

The nurses would get a lump sum payment of $600, plus five wage increases over the term of the contract.

It increases the rate of a first-year nurse to $1,900 a month from $1,305. Top-level supervisory pay increases to $2,745 a month from $1,924.

The five increases are: $145 a month from Jan. 1, 12 per cent on May 1, $76 a month on Jan. 1, 1981, eight per cent Aug. 1, 1981, and 3.49 per cent Jan. 1, 1982.

But the same day RNABC was announcing this agreement, it served seven-day strike notice for 2,700 community and psychiatric nurses.

Victoria-area health units are not affected by this dispute.

The nurses' contract expired Dec. 31, 1979, and the major issue is wages.

The government's bargaining agency, the Government Employee Relations Bureau, has proposed a three-year-agreement with an eight-per-cent increase each year.

The nurses want a 27-month contract with a compounded salary increase of 39 per cent.

Mediator Clarke Gilmour was involved in the dispute and has been asked to withdraw by RNABC.

No strike action is possible until he reports to the labor minister and the minister informs both parties of this action.

The nurses voted Dec. 18 by a 91-per-cent margin to go on strike to back up their demands.

The Labor Code states that a strike vote is only operative for 90 days and that time limit expired.

However, both parties involved in the dispute agreed to an extension of the deadline.

RNABC was given a 98-per-cent strike mandate by the 12,500 RNs who now have a tentative agreement.

St. Helens starts to pop her peak

Smoke and ash were reported pouring out of the top of Mount St. Helens shortly before 1 p.m. today.

SPIRIT LAKE, Wash. (UPI) — More earthquakes shook dormant volcano Mount St. Helens today as the last few residents who live on the slopes of the Southwest Washington mountain evacuated their homes.

Scientists have warned that Mount St. Helens, which last erupted in 1857, may be building toward another eruption that could come within a few days.

The last of approximately 60 year-round residents of the Spirit Lake area on the volcano's north side moved out after being warned of the danger.

Gifford-Pinchot National Forest officials in Vancouver, Wash., said Forest Service personnel working in the Mount St. Helens area were removed during the night, but returned to work during the daytime hours.

On Wednesday sheriff's deputies blocked off the only major highway to the snow-covered, 9,677-foot mountain 100 miles south of Seattle.

All private aircraft were banned from flying over the 9,766-foot peak because federal officials said the airspace was becoming congested with sightseers.

"That thing erupts every 60 to 100 years consistently," said Dr. Leonard Palmer, geology professor at Portland State University. "We haven't had an eruption for more than 100 years.

"You'd have to have your head in the sand to not be worried."

A rapid-fire series of earthquakes began last Thursday and reached a one-a-minute peak Tuesday night before diminishing to about one per hour Wednesday.

Scientists believe the biggest threat from an eruption at Mount St. Helens would not be from lava, but from mudflows roaring down the mountain into three hydroelectric reservoirs on the Lewis River just south of the peak.

That could cause massive flooding in the entire river valley and possibly swell the Columbia River, threatening the city of Portland about 50 miles away.

Zero growth, higher prices grim forecast

OTTAWA (CP) — The economy is not expected to grow at all this year, the Conference Board in Canada said Wednesday in its latest and most pessimistic outlook for 1980.

The board, an Ottawa-based business research group, had earlier forecast growth of 0.7 per cent, but because of worsening world economic conditions it now expects zero growth.

Furthermore, the board said, "this year of no growth will be accompanied by continuing high rates of inflation."

It estimates consumer prices will rise by 9.7 per cent compared with inflation of 9.1 per cent last year.

Unemployment is also expected to worsen to 7.8 per cent from 7.5 per cent, the board said in its quarterly forecast.

Despite a slowdown in export sales, the current account deficit is expected to rise only slightly to $5.3 billion because imports are expected to slow as well. The current account is a measure of Canada's trade in goods, services and travel with other countries.

The board estimates the federal deficit will rise to $12.4 billion this year, slightly higher than in 1979, because continued inflation and slow growth will result in federal revenue rising less quickly than expenditures.

The board's forecast assumes no change in government policy, thus sidestepping the effects of anticipated higher oil prices and a federal budget. As a result, the board warns its inflation forecast may be too low.

Consumer spending, after adjusting for inflation, is expected to grow by 1.7 per cent in 1980, reflecting the erosion of real purchasing power because of price increases.

Housing starts of only 163,000 units — the lowest since 1968 — have been estimated as demand will be weak in light of high interest rates and consumers having less money available for major spending activities.

Business investment — the main source of economic strength in 1979 — will still be the most positive element for the economy.

The board warns that Canadian interest rates will continue to parallel those in the U.S. because of the continued high current account deficit and government concern about a decline in the value of the dollar.

But interest rates could peak during the summer and then decline by the end of 1980 with short-term rates — of up to one year — likely to fall more quickly than long-term rates.

Stocks take plunge

BULLETIN

The Toronto stock market plunged a record 95.65 points at today's closing in the wake of the latest bank rate increase and heavy price declines in precious metals. Trading volume doubled from Wednesday to 10.75 million shares. In New York, the Dow Jones industrial index tumbled more than 20 points to its lowest level in five years. Veteran brokers called it a classic panic

Times News Services

The Bank of Canada lending rate rose by 0.70 per cent to a record 15.49 per cent today as the Toronto and New York stock markets plunged.

Hard on the heels of the central bank rate hike, the Royal Bank of Canada and the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce raised their prime lending rates Thursday to a record 16.5 per cent from 15.75 per cent, effective today, and other major Canadian chartered banks were expected to follow suit.

The Bank of Canada, raising the rate at which it lends money to the nation's financial institutions for a third consecutive week, was continuing its new policy of letting its lending rates float 0.25 per cent above the average yield of 91-day treasury bills.

Visit the stars

Sally Field is rated as the hot favorite to win the Oscar for best actress on April 14.

Her performance as Norma Rae, a young woman who gets involved in the tension-filled union struggles of a southern plant, has been widely hailed.

New York movie writers called it the best performance of the year.

But predicting Academy Award winners can be a difficult chore.

For example, last year Jill Clayburgh was regarded by the same New York writers as a shoo-in for the best actress award but Academy voters in Los Angeles surprised them by picking Jane Fonda.

Fonda and Clayburgh are back again this year, along with Marsha Mason and Bette Midler.

The Victoria Times and VI*90 are sponsoring a Visit the Stars contest, giving readers a chance to win a trip for two to Hollywood if they can correctly predict the Academy Awards for best actress, best actor and best movie.

The official entry form, along with the full list of rules, is in an advertisement on page 37 today.

'I pray he doesn't harm someone'

By MIKE HUGHES

The mother of a 15-year-old boy whose sentence at a B.C. juvenile detention centre ends Friday fears for her son's future.

"I'll give him a week and he'll be right back in," she said in an interview today.

"I just hope and pray he doesn't harm someone before he's back."

Her son has a drug problem and was sentenced to the centre for being involved in a purse snatching.

He's spent time in receiving homes, remand homes and other facilities and critics of the system say his case is typical of the way juveniles are shuffled about.

They spend so much time in detention centres that they begin to look on them as home.

The 15-year-old is being tested now for possible brain damage from LSD use and the dilemma facing the court Friday is simple: Where does he go from here?

There are no mental health resources for youngsters and if he stays in the community the problem is how to keep him off drugs?

His case came up Wednesday in Victoria's family court along with two others and Judge Lawrence Brahan gave the boy's probation officer until Friday to come up with alternatives.

If none is available, he will be released and become a ward of the superintendent of child welfare.

That probably means a foster home and his mother fears he won't last long there.

"He needs help. He needs some one-on-one therapy and he's not getting it," she said.

"If they put him in a foster home, he's going to blow it."

She says her son is typical of problem kids who are pushed from one person to another.

Professional people try to help but they don't seem to have any answers either, she said.

"I don't see the solution. If it is brought to the public's attention, they will just say they are a bunch of bad kids — the public really doesn't care."

Victoria Ald. Gretchen Brewin who was in family court when the boy appeared, said it's time the community became more
